Now It's 'Super-Minister' Bob

Strachan, former NDP leader and one of the veteran parliamentarians on the government benches, came away from Government House after the swearing-in ceremonies with a new portfolio, a whole sheaf of responsibilities and the future presidency of the B.C. Railway.

Strachan becomes Minister of Transportation and Communications, taking from his old highways portfolio responsibility for the B.C. Ferries Service, the Motor Vehicle Branch, the Data Processing Branch and all government aircraft.

In addition, he stays on as president of the government-run Insurance Corporation of B.C. and becomes a member of the board of directors of the B.C. Railway.

When springtime rolls around again next year, Strachan will have become president of the railway, succeeding Barrett when negotiations with the federal government and several Barrett-initiated projects are brought to fruition.

If that was not enough, Barrett said in response to a question Friday that Strachan will be the minister responsible for all aspects of communications. The question had been if Strachan would be introducing machinery to allow the government to take over the B.C. Telephone Co., a project Barrett has often said is on the list of things to do for his government.

Barrett grinned as he said: "Mr. Strachan will be responsible for all matters of communication."

After all the ceremonies were completed, Strachan told reporters briefly of his initial plans as Minister of Transportation and Communications.

One, he said, is to negotiate with the federal government over the matter of jurisdiction over such services as cable television and telephone services. And, according to the NDP's game plan, another would be to sort out with the federal government the federal charter arrangement which B.C. Tel has, which amounts to the major stumbling block in the way of provincial control of the telephone company.

Strachan said he is looking forward to his new job and that he considers it to be "interesting, exciting and one of great potential. They'll keep me busy," he said.

The 59-year-old MLA from Cowichan-Malahat seems to thrive on hard work. With his new responsibilities, he feels he'll get lots of it, starting early next week.

He will be travelling to Ottawa for the federal-provincial first ministers' conference with Premier Barrett. After that, it's off to London to talk to the famous company, Lloyd's of London, about the insurance business.

Insurance: Gov't Set To Fill Gap

Times News Services

VANCOUVER — If too many private car insurance firms cut back on coverage for B.C. drivers, the government insurance corporation will fill the gap until the government plan becomes operational next year, it was disclosed Friday by a spokesman for the Insurance Corporation of B.C.

Next March 1 is the beginning date for the monopoly government scheme.

"Plans are being developed in the event that it is necessary," said the spokesman. The statement was later confirmed by the general manager of the corporation, Norman Bortnick, although Bortnick sought to minimize the possibility of such an emergency, in line with the claim Thursday by Bob Strachan, minister in charge of government insurance, that there is no need to "panic" over indications of cutbacks by a number of firms.

"We will adjust to the situation as necessary," said Bortnick. "We would have to do what was necessary."

Meanwhile, Liberal leader David Anderson branded a "major scandal" the deal between the Insurance Corp. of B.C. and IBM Canada Ltd. without going to tender.

Anderson fired his shots while visiting Prince George and at the same time accused the news media of ignoring the issue because of its "honeymoon with the NDP government."

The computer is to cost $1.5 million a year, plus a once-only payment of $1 million for programming.

Anderson likened the deal to two other "scandals" involving the government. These he listed as a purchase without tender by B.C. Hydro of buses from a firm controlled by the Manitoba government and the B.C. law requiring firms doing business with the government to hire union labor only.

No Extra Ferries

NEWS BRIEFS

Victoria Day weekend travellers who miss the 10 p.m. ferry between Swartz Bay and Tsawwassen will have to wait until the next morning to sail.

No extra sailings beyond the final 10 p.m. run will be made even if there are enough extra vehicles to warrant it, ferries traffic manager Bob Innes said.

Transportation Minister Bob Strachan would not comment any further either.

"It's crewing problems and that's all I'm going to say," he said.

Innes said a big backup of vehicles waiting to leave after the 10 p.m. sailing "happens very rarely". He said it's unlikely that large numbers of motorists will be stranded on the mainland or on Vancouver Island because of the change.

There will be no extra sailings between Departure Bay and Horseshoe Bay either this weekend.

DELAY IN PAY FOR MAILMEN

OTTAWA (CP) — A computer breakdown has caused a two-week delay in pay increases to letter carriers, a spokesman for the post office said Friday. But the cheques should be in the mail next week.

Escaper Caught

VANCOUVER (CP) — Donald Oag, 23, who escaped the custody of a British Columbia penitentiary guard Friday by pulling a knife on his way to a medical appointment, was recaptured later Friday. RCMP said the London, Ont., man was picked up after a resident of Maillardville, in suburban Coquitlam, saw a strange man in his garage. Oag was apprehended without resistance.

Grain Handlers Out

VANCOUVER (CP) — More than 600 grain elevator workers here are refusing to work overtime, protesting what they say is a conspiracy by three co-operatives to force a shutdown of Burrard Terminals Ltd. in North Vancouver. The ban started today and the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union is supporting the action.

$500 Million Bet

NEW YORK (AP) — More than $500 million has been bet on horses at New York's off-track betting parlors since last July 1 and more than $819 million since the first parlor opened in April, 1971. An off-track betting board spokesman said "we expect to meet our budget and earn for government $42 million in this fiscal year."

B.C. Union Drive

OTTAWA (CP) — A Canadian Labor Congress committee has decided to look at British Columbia for the next phase of a new $400,000 white-collar worker organizing drive. Until now, the newly-chartered Association of Commercial and Technical Employees has been concentrating on Toronto staffs of insurance and banking companies.

Gas Rates Okayed

OTTAWA (CP) — The National Energy Board announced Friday night it has approved an application by Trans Canada Pipe Lines Ltd. of Toronto to increase rates for transmission of natural gas. The increases average 8.6 per cent, varying from 2.4 per cent in the western part of the pipe-line system to an average of 10.2 per cent in southern Ontario and Quebec.

Documents 'Implicate President'

Times News Services

WASHINGTON — Eleven new documents have come to light making it harder to "visualize" that President Nixon knew nothing about White House efforts to involve the Central Intelligence Agency in a cover-up of the Watergate scandal, Sen. Stuart Symington said Friday.

Symington (D-Mo.) said that CIA deputy-director Vernon Walters submitted to several congressional committees 11 typewritten memorandums on contacts between the White House and CIA involving both the Watergate and Pentagon Papers cases. Symington refused to divulge the contents of the memorandums.

A White House legal aide, meanwhile, has revealed in sworn testimony that the White House suspected Watergate conspirator James McCord of writing an anonymous letter four months ago warning against efforts to link the CIA to the bugging scandal.

Deputy White House counsel Fred Fielding told the story of the mysterious letter earlier this week to attorneys taking a pre-trial deposition in connection with the Democrat's $6.4 million Watergate suit against Nixon's re-election campaign organization.

Fielding said the letter was sent to former White House staff member John Caulfield just before McCord's January trial. McCord told senate investigators Friday that Caulfield, one of his personal friends, relayed to him from the White House high command an offer of

More Shooting at Falls

Times News Services

SALISBURY — Three shots were fired today from the Zambian side of the Victoria Falls where two Canadian girls were killed and an American was wounded Tuesday, Rhodesia police said.

The shots were fired down the second gorge at the falls, possibly at the bridge linking Rhodesia, the spokesman said.

Meanwhile the parents of one of the Canadians, Marjan Drijber, are en route to Johannesburg convinced their daughter is still alive.

"We are convinced in our own minds that Marjan is still alive. She is a very strong swimmer, in fact she was top of her class, "Oscar Drijber, 59, said. "She is a physically strong girl, an outdoor girl.

"As long as there is no body found then there is every hope that she is alive," he said.

A Rhodesian government spokesman said today Zambia's explanation for the shooting of two Canadian girls and the wounding of the American was quite unacceptable.

"The Zambian government is endeavoring to cover up this crime by trying to justify the barbarity of the act perpetrated by their ill-disciplined soldiers," the government spokesman said.

"In endeavoring to reduce the responsibility to one soldier' they are camouflaging the true facts. There is absolute evidence that a group of soldiers was involved and that they kept firing at the unfortunate victims for nearly three hours."

Killed in Tuesday's shooting were Christine Sinclair, 20 of Guelph, Ont., and Miss Drijber, 19, of Rockwood, Ont. John Crothers, 28, of Troy, Ohio, was recovering in hospital from wounds he received. His wife Carol, 25, escaped unhurt.

Miss Sinclair's body was recovered, but Miss Drijber fell into the Zambezi River and

BIG COLCEL RETURN

VANCOUVER (CP) — The British Columbia government could wind up 1973 with a $10 million profit from Columbia Cellulose Ltd., Vancouver industrialist James Sinclair said Friday.

Sinclair, a former federal Liberal cabinet member and the father-in-law of Prime Minister Trudeau, is a former director of Columbia Cellulose.

The company had forecast a $6 million profit before it was sold to the government, he said in an interview.

Premier Dave Barrett "has a couple of things going for him," he added.

"He got the plants for nothing and the new operation is from a much reduced debt structure. The other is the improving market in lumber and pulp."

Skyjackers' Bluff Called

MEXICO CITY (AP) — A hijacked Venezuelan airliner, carrying four leftist gunmen, 37 hostage passengers and crew and a Mexican government official, left for Cuba today after Venezuela turned down a demand for release of political prisoners.

The departure was announced shortly after Miguel Nazar, a Mexican interior ministry official who had boarded the plane to negotiate with the hijackers, radioed he was staying aboard to guarantee the lives of the hijackers.

He said the gunmen had promised to free the hostages — 32 passengers and five crew members — in Cuba.

Earlier the hijackers had threatened to blow up the plane and the hostages unless Venezuela released 79 political prisoners. Speaking to the plane by radio from the control tower Humberto Rumbos, first secretary of the Venezuelan embassy in Mexico, told the hijackers his government refused to meet their demand.

A letter from the hijackers listed the names of the prisoners and specified that they should be released and flown to Cuba within 48 hours of the time that the plane was hijacked over Venezuela. It was hijacked at 2:36 p.m. EDT Friday.

Addressed to President Rafael Caldera of Venezuela, the letter stated, "If you do not proceed to free the revolutionaries demanded in the attached list, we will proceed to destroy the plane with all its hostages."

The letter was delivered to authorities at the airport by a reporter from a Mexican paper and a civil aviation inspector.

Pilots Brace for Skylab Repair

Times News Services

HOUSTON — With their disabled space station awaiting an in-orbit service call, Skylab's astronauts today try out hastily-built tools they will use Friday in a bold attempt to fix overheating and power problems.

After working with the new-fangled sunshade apparatus and associated tools here, the pilots will fly to Huntsville, Ala., Sunday to practice under water where they float as if they were in weightless space.

Meanwhile sources said the Soviet Union scrubbed the launch of two cosmonauts earlier this week because an unmanned Soyuz spacecraft with which they would have docked in space apparently suffered an accident after it reached orbit.

No details of the accident are available, but it comes on the heels of a failure last month of the $500 million Salyut space station, and two weeks ago to a Lunokhod moon rover which fell into the Pacific Ocean. The failure this time of the Soyuz is the first of 20 manned and unmanned Soyuz spacecraft to undergo a failure in earth orbit.

The plan calls for Charles "Pete" Conrad, Joseph Kerwin and Paul Weitz to take off from Cape Kennedy Friday in an Apollo loaded with 90 pounds of repair and replacement equipment.

With moonflight veteran Conrad at the controls, the astronauts will circle the 118-foot Skylab and survey the damage resulting from an unexplained accident 63 seconds after launch last Monday that ripped off its meteoroid and sun shield and jammed two solar wing generators. Then they will start the first major repairs ever made in space.

Project officials were more optimistic late Friday than they have been since Skylab's problems. The engineers now believe Skylab will be able to serve as home for nine men—three crews — for a total of 140 days in orbit as originally planned.

Flight controllers today tried to dump possible poisonous gases from the cabin of the orbiting Skylab space station and repressurize it with fresh oxygen and nitrogen.

The action was taken to make sure Skylab will have a safe atmosphere when the astronauts fly up to try to fix the ship's overheating and electrical power problems.

The toxic gases apparently were generated by the 110-degree plus temperatures the Skylab cabin was subjected to earlier this week.

A NASA spokesman said flight directors started venting the contaminated cabin atmosphere Friday afternoon and stopped early today when the force of the exhausted gases turned the nose of Skylab to the right.

'SPIRIT' MAKES BIG SPLASH

The model airplane built and piloted by members of the Victoria Radio Control Model Club was on a maiden flight from Ediz Hook at Port Angeles to Clover Point.

For most of the flight the airplane was fine, but a mile and a half from Clover Point it nosedived into the water.

"There seemed to be some kind of failure in the aircraft and it came down," said Ed Parratt, man in charge of the flight.

"It exploded when it hit the water," he added. "The radio of the aircraft was recovered but the engine went right to the bottom."

On-Site Probe At Mine

An on-site investigation into pollution problems at the copper mine at Jordan River will be held June 4, William Venables, director of the Pollution Control Branch, said Friday.

Invitations have been sent to official objectors to the mine's request for an amendment to its pollution permit to increase the amount of effluent discharged through the pipe's 1,500-foot outfall, he said.

The company wants the point of discharge for coarse material to be 10 feet below the low-water line and the fine material at a depth of 40 feet.

Under its present permit, themine has only permission to discharge a million gallons of tailings through the 1,500-foot outfall.

The Capital Regional District and environmental groups oppose the company's application on the grounds the new proposal will increase pollution of the recreational beach area.

CRD also claims that the mine's pipe was not installed properly and broke, allowing effluent to pollute beaches in the area.

Venables said the on-the-site investigations is to hear the pros and cons of experts on the company's application to discharge more tailings through two outfalls.

"We have to make a decision on this issue before dealing with complaints about the broken discharge pipe and whether the present outfall is adequate," he said.

The complaints that the present outfall is not working properly is a separate matter," he added ."We will look into this after we have dealt with the company's application."

Nixon Implicated

executive clemency if he would plead guilty and keep silent.

The White House flatly denied McCord's allegations.

Sources close to the Senate hearing, however, said Friday investigators believe they can establish that former presidential counsellor John Ehrlichman authorized repeated offers of executive clemency to McCord.

McCord quoted Caulfield as saying executive clemency would be given him after a year in jail, that the offer had come "from the highest levels of the White House," and that Nixon had been told of the offers and would be informed of McCord's decision.

McCord said he assumed Caulfield meant the offer came from the president, Ehrlichman or White House chief of staff H. R. Haldeman.

Caulfield will be called as the next witness before the Senate hearings. He is scheduled to testify after McCord finishes at the next session, scheduled for Tuesday.

Caulfield issued a statement Friday saying that McCord's testimony "does not fully reflect my best recollection of the events . . ." but that he met with McCord "on three occasions in January and conveyed to him certain messages from a high White House official."

Staff investigators already have questioned Caulfield, on leave from his job at the treasury department. Sources say Caulfield has declined to say whether anyone higher up authorized him to make the clemency offers to McCord. They say originally Caulfield said that he merely pretended to McCord that his offers came from higher-ups, and that he was just "puffing" to impress McCord of the importance of his silence.

However, the sources said "Caulfield was Ehrlichman's man," and indicated they can prove orders regarding clemency came from Ehrlichman.

In other developments:

— CIA officials testified in a closed congressional subcommittee hearing that it opened its unclassified files at least twice to former White House aide E. Howard Hunt, several months after the agency supposedly discontinued help to him in August, 1971. Hunt, later convicted in the Watergate case, was allowed to examine files at CIA headquarters in Langley, Va., after then-director Richard Helms ordered an end to aid to the former White House consultant.

— Former Securities and Exchange Commission chairman William Casey, now touring South America, said Friday he rebuffed a request by former White House counsel John Dean to seek postponement of subpoenaes relating to a secret campaign contribution by financier Robert Vesco.

The Name Of The Game . . .

CINCINNATI (UPI) — Three New York promotion executives have devised a game similar to Monopoly but called Watergate.

Hennegan Co., a local printing firm, has run off 10,000 copies. The game, which costs $3, is a brainchild of Frank Ombres, John Bookstaver and Milt fisher.

The board has a large color photo of the Watergate apartment complex in the centre and 40 colored panels surrounding it.

The instructions that come with the game: "Any number can play. All that's needed is a pair of dice and you, too, can be a little bugger. The object of the game is to stay out of jail as long as possible."

Each player moves along the squares according to the toss of the dice. Squares bear wording as "grand jury leak — all players advance one space" or "you offer the wrong federal judge a cabinet post — go to jail."

$400,000 Car Suit

VANCOUVER (CP) — Chrysler Canada Ltd. has launched civil action in federal court here to recover more than $400,000 in damages from the owners of the freighter Vanlene which grounded last year near Bamfield, on Vancouver Island.

The 10,500-ton ship, registered in Panama, was carrying 300 Dodge Colts to Vancouver from Japan when it became lost in dense fog and grounded 14 months ago at the mouth of Barkley Sound. The ship has since broken in two.

Only 129 of the cars were salvageable. Salt water had destroyed the rest before salvage crews could reach the scene.

Vancouver lawyer David McEwen, who is representing Chrysler, said Friday the suit has been brought against the ship's owners, Marlene Shipping Co. Ltd. of Panama, and the charterers, Yamashita-Shinnihon Steamship Co. Ltd. of Tokyo.

He would not disclose the exact amount of damages sought by Chrysler, but said the sum is approximately equal to the retail price (about $2,500) of the cars, or $427,500 in total. No trial date has been set although McEwen said the case likely will be heard before the end of this year.

The federal government is also trying to collect about $140,000 damages from the freighter's owners for costs incurred in fighting an oil spill that resulted from the grounding. Federal justice department lawyers have so far been unable to bring the case to court.

hijacked on a domestic flight over Venezuela with 32 passengers and five crew members aboard.

It was first directed to Curacao, where it refuelled, and then on to Panama, where the hijackers issued a communique demanding release of the prisoners.

The hijackers released three women passengers and two children at Panama's Tocumen Airport before flying to Merida, the Mexican city closest to Havana, one of the points for which they had asked navigation charts.

At the capital airport the plane was parked on a runway and the hijackers asked to talk to a representative of the Mexican government.

Humberto Rumbos, first secretary of the Venezuelan embassy, was at the airport, but said he was there only as an observer. He said his government gave instructions not to make any deals with the hijackers.

While the plane was at Merida the Venezuelan government had taken a stand against negotiation. It ordered Rumbos not to go to Merida as the hijackers demanded.

her body has not been found.

The Zambian statement early today said an army officer on guard on the power station on the Zambezi River fired on four persons he saw swimming in the river "on a mission to attrack the power station."

Referring to this the Rhodesian spokesman said, "Their claim that their soldiers thought that they could have been a treat from three women and a man who were obviously tourists and that they were shot in Zambian waters cannot be believed by anyone. The river throughout the gorge is a raging torrent.

"The American, Mr. Crothers, put the matter in true perspective when he said 'there had been no provocation whatsoever for the attack.' In my estimation it was cold blooded murder."

"In justification of this wanton act the Zambian government have attempted to fabricate a situation which they say exists on their border and have referred to a number of incidents, none of which was perpetrated by Rhodesians," the Rhodesian spokesman said.

"This statement is as fatuous as their explanation of the murder of the two Canadian girls and the wounding of the American.

"It is clear that the Zambian government is setting the stage for the imminent arrival of (UN secretary general) Dr. (Kurt) Waldheim in order to attract whatever advantages they can from the United Nations," he said.

"It is their devious way of attempting to establish that tension exists on their border in order to bolster their claim for UN aid."

England Captures Soccer Title

LONDON (Reuter) — England, the favorites, retained the British soccer championship with a 1-0 victory over Scotland before a capacity crowd of 100,000 at Wembley Stadium Saturday.

England, who have dominated the four-country tournament since 1967, won in the 54th minute on a goal by Martin Peters, who took a pass from Alan Ball.

England was awarded a free kick near the touch line about 25 yards from the Scottish goal. Ball sent the ball towards the far post where Peters, unguarded, headed in.

The Socred Mat Out For New Democrats

VANCOUVER (CP) — Opposition leader W. A. C. Bennett said Friday night there was a space on the Social Credit welcome mat for members of the New Democratic Party, as well as for Liberals and Conservatives.

The former premier of British Columbia told 800 paying guests at a "free enterprise;" banquet that given such an alliance, "we'll destroy the NDP."

The 72-year-old Social Credit leader said his party lost 16 per cent of its vote in the 1972 election — eight per cent to the Tories and eight per cent to the NDP.

"But I welcome them back home," he said, claiming an additional three per cent of new members had come from the NDP, "so tonight the Social Credit Party in this province is stronger than ever before."

Bennett predicted the NDP would be ousted within three years.

The party leader recounted his many years with Social Credit and listed the seven elections which kept him in as premier of the province. then he added that "a thousand things happened in 1972 — the premier made some mistakes and I'm sure his cabinet will agree they did too."

the weather

Cooler weather will continue as the upper flow of winds remains westerly.

This same pattern will maintain a series of systems moving across the North Pacific into the province. These systems will be most active in the north coast and then become progressively weaker as they move into the south coast and inland.

BRITISH COLUMBIA ENERGY COMMISSION

PUBLIC HEARING ON MATTERS CONCERNING THE NATURAL GAS INDUSTRY IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

A Public Hearing will be held by the British Columbia Energy Commission at the 21st Floor, 1177 West Hastings Street, Vancouver, B.C., commencing at 10:30 a.m. on Tuesday, June 12th, 1973, to inquire into matters relating to the natural gas industry in British Columbia referred to the Commission for its advice under Part II of the Energy Act, S.B.C. 1973, Chapter 29, by Order in Council 1481, which matters include, among others, the following:

(1) the desirability of establishing a minimum reserve of British Columbia natural gas for British Columbia requirements as a prerequisite to any increase in the amount of British Columbia natural gas exported from the Province, the amount of gas which might properly be so reserved and the manner in which such reserve might be established and maintained;

(2) the level of present and anticipated field prices of British Columbia natural gas, the factors which influence such field prices, and whether such prices appear to be in the British Columbia public interest;

(3) the level of present and anticipated prices of natural gas delivered to British Columbia consumers, the desirability of maintaining such prices at moderate and stable levels and the manner in which such levels may be established and maintained in the British Columbia public interest;

(4) present and anticipated royalties payable to the Province as the owner of British Columbia natural gas and whether the said royalties fairly reflect the value of such gas after due allowance for costs and risks incurred in its discovery and removal;

(5) the rate of exploration for natural gas in British Columbia and whether and in what manner such exploration might be accelerated in the British Columbia public interest;

(6) the agreements of the 1st day of March, 1973, between Westcoast Transmission Company Limited and El Paso Natural Gas Company, whether the said agreements are in the British Columbia public interest and what action, if any, ought to be taken to protect the British Columbia public interest in respect to the said agreements and any matters ancillary thereto.

All persons desiring to be heard at the said Public Hearing are required to send to the offices of the Commission at 21st Floor, 1177 West Hastings Street, Vancouver, B.C., 10 copies of a Notice of Intention to Appear stating the nature of their interest and setting forth an outline of the evidence or submission which they intend to present, such Notice to be received by the Commission not later than Tuesday, the 5th day of June, 1973.

Big...Black...With Pink Legs? Elementary: It's Oystercatcher

It was big — and black — with pink legs and feet, a bright red beak and red — or yellow — eyes.

Not much to go on but certainly a cut above some of the descriptions I get over the phone, descriptions of strange birds people see and try to put a name to.

In this case, some careful questioning brought out that the bird was as big as a crow and was seen striding briskly along the inside shore of Esquimalt Spit. And those eyes, when you get a good close look at them, turn out to be yellow, each with a red circle around it.

Sometimes even the most obvious solutions evade me at times like this but for once I got the bird — or so I think — right off. It was a black oystercatcher, a showy shorebird that can be seen just about any time of the year frequenting rocky coastal inlets from Alaska to California.

The identification problem out of the way, I started to ponder that name — black oystercatcher. Black for sure, but oystercatcher?

The name brings to mind a wild chase over the rocks, the oyster a few steps ahead of the oystercatcher — hardly the behavior for an animal that spends most of its life firmly plastered against a rock.

No, in my limited experience, oysters — rather than being caught — must be forcibly ejected.

The name oystercatcher comes to us from the old world where one member of this clan lives. Whether feeding habits of oystercatchers are different in the auld sod, I do not know, but it seems certain that, here at least, oysters form only a small part of these birds' food and then only by accident.

John James Audubon, in describing the feeding habits of the American oystercatcher — the black and white east coast representative of the North American oystercatcher family — speaks of oystercatchers inserting their chisel-like beaks into gaping oysters and, with surgical precision, removing the animal.

It seems like a hazardous occupation, one that might result in an oystercatcher being caught by an oyster.

But that long bill, slightly flattened near the tip, does come into play in providing the oystercatchers chief food here on the west coast.

Soon after an ebbing tide has exposed beds of mussels — or even before the retreating water has completely uncovered the beds — oystercatchers can be seen systematically working the clusters of partly-open bivalves, deftly probing and stabbing and removing the succulent marine animals from their calcerous quarters.

Even the oystercatchers strong feet may come into play. If, for example, a particularly alert mussel — one that is due for the oystercatcher's attention — has clamped its shells tightly shut before the oystercatcher can begin his surgery, the oystercatcher may then simply hammer it into submission.

Swinging his heavy beak, with his neck as a lever, his body a fulcrum and feet as anchors, the oystercatcher literally pulverizes the mussel before delicately removing the meat from among the broken shell.

Many kinds of marine animals find their ultimate fate in the gastro-intestinal tract of an oystercatcher. Not the least of these are limpets.

Limpets, when they are not hutning, spend their time firmly anchored to a rock. They seem able to quickly detect danger. A shadow or sudden movement in the water may be all the warning they need to tighten themselves against the rocks and resist all but the most persistent efforts to dislodge them.

But oystercatchers have the knack; that bill again. By adroitly inserting it under the limpet's shell, and with a quick twist of its head, the oystercatcher simply lifts the limpet from its protective rock.

So instead of oystercatcher, a more appropriate name for these large shorebirds who stalk our seashore with grotesque dignity, might simply be limpet-lifters — black limpet-lifters if you will.

Polar Project

OTTAWA (CP) — United States, British and German scientists will join their Canadian counterparts in Arctic research this year under the auspices of the Polar Continental Shelf Project.

The project, launched in 1959 by the federal energy department, has the twin goals of gathering scienfific information on the shelf and asserting Canadian sovereignty.

This year's projects include observing the growth and properties of sea ice, following the tracks of Parry's 1820 expedition in search of a northwest passage, charting sea lanes and investigating permafrost.

Cabinet Ministers Almost Speechless

By BRIAN BUTTERS
Times Staff

What does a person say when he's been a cabinet minister for all of five minutes and is asked about his plans for the department he is taking over?

The answer is: not very much.

The five new cabinet ministers named by Premier Dave Barrett Friday were a little reluctant to put themselves out on a limb when confronted by reporters after being sworn in at Government House by Lieutenant-Governor Walter Owen.

Answers such as "It will take some time to accustom myself . . .", "It's a bit early to say very much . . .", and "I'll be doing a survey . . .", were the order of the day for new Recreation and Conservation Minister Jack Radford, Trade Minister Gary Lauk, Highways Minister Graham Lea and ministers without portfolio Pyllis Young and Lorne Nicolson.

The appointment of Lea to the cabinet was no real surprise as Barrett's desire to have the people of the north represented in the cabinet is well known. Lea is the MLA for Prince Rupert.

He told reporters Friday his main thrust in the new department will be to have northern problems recognized in the southern part of the province. "For years and years, the problems of the north have been ignored in cabinet," he said.

Lea intends to work closely with Transportation and Communications Minister Bob Strachan, whose portfolio he took over, and with Lauk and Resources Minister Bob Williams to put together a solid transportation system in the northern parts of the province. "The highways department should not work in isolation," he said.

Phyllis Young, who takes over responsibility for the new post of consumer affairs, is not satisfied with the state of the legislation and the amount of manpower which is used to look into consumer problems in B.C.

"Things are very complicated," financially and mechanically, she said. "People are being ripped off in some cases, and finding they have no place to file a complaint."

Her immediate plans are to pull together the various pieces of legislation relating to consumer affairs, decide which ones are deficient, and amend them as quickly as possible.

Areas of high frequencies of complaints will also be scrutinized, she said, including the area of mobile homes and the availability of service and repairs.

New Trade Minister Gary Lauk sees himself analyzing whatever research material is available on his new department. He said he will be looking for a certain amount of expertise from the private sector and "will take some few days to familiarize myself with the department."

Lauk has been practising law in Vancouver for the past seven years after graduating from the University of British Columbia. He, like the other four new ministers, was elected to the legislature for the first time in the 1972 election in the riding of Vancouve Centre.

New Recreation and Conservation Minister Jack Radford, 44-year-old member from Vancouver South, said the fact he has been fishing and hunting "all my life" will stand him in good stead in his new portfolio.

During the recent legislative session, Radford urged careful consideration for the province's game reserves. He told reporters Friday this will be a major area of concern for him as a minister.

Radford described himself as an active outdoorsman. He said he spent two years living in Prince George, where he discovered some of the problems of the north.

He also said a problem which must be looked at closely is that of people moving in and taking over the habitat of other creatures, forcing them to fend for themselves in alien surroundings.

Lorne Nicolson, minister without portfolio responsible for housing, said he will likely be doing a survey of the province's housing requirements.

Both the quality and quantity of housing must be looked at, he said. Certain areas on the lower mainland and in some interior cities are experiencing housing shortages, he said, which must be filled as quickly as possible.

Nicolson said he favors the concept of mixed accommodation for public housing, including low-rent and medium-rent facilities in the same unit.

He said efforts will be made to improve the types of mobile home accommodation available to consumers and improve the landscaping around mobile home parks.

New Government, New Costs

Premier Barrett's appointment of five new cabinet members was to be expected. Several ministers were carrying the load of two portfolios, and the new government has seen fit to create one or two new departments. So the traditional process of filling cabinet posts need excite little comment, apart from speculation as to what some of the relatively unknown newcomers may accomplish.

There is somewhat more concern regarding Mr. Barrett's activities in regard to civil service salaries. While a ten per cent raise for some 31,000 public employees is not exorbitant for these days of inflationary tail-chasing, it certainly constitutes a large increase in the operational expense of the government and raises the question of whether Provincial Secretary Hall's dictum that "performance is the name of the game" will be fully demonstrated in every case.

The effect on the budget will be enhanced by Mr. Barrett's plans to increase the civil service by one thousand or more workers — in large part for the new government-operated insurance system. But that is only part of the picture. There has been some comment on the disclosure that the premier's own annual income as MLA and head of the government will come to $52,000 — $4,000 more than the head of Canada's government receives. He defends the sum, and other high salaries and indemnities for his ministers, on the grounds that these will invite ordinary people, without independent means, to take part in politics.

So be it; and if "ordinary people" can prove themselves sufficiently skilled in statecraft, in the management of multi-million-dollar departments and in the general administration of a large and wealthy province, the money may be well spent. Mr. Bennett, no champion of "ordinary people," picked some dandies himself.

In the less-than-cabinet ranks, but considerably above the routine level of the civil service, Mr. Barrett has been making some hardly noticed but none-the-less important appointments which will also add considerably to the salary totals. An education commissioner will receive $28,000 a year, and the new Hydro head will get $45,000. A $40,000 health appointment and a $30,000 job in the energy commission add to the interest. But 15 appointments at $16,020 each are very interesting too.

Some new incumbents have previously appeared in the public eye only as NDP supporters. With deputy ministers' salaries now to range from $33,000 to $42,000, there no doubt will be a great display of what Mr. Hall calls a "good piece of work."

The public should not begrudge good salaries for civil servants providing good jobs are being done and the people are being well served. British Columbia has been fortunate with its civil service in the past: it has maintained a high standard. Substantially higher incomes should not change that situation, although they may make the public increasingly critical. And it might become increasingly difficult to remain ordinary.

With More Optimism Than Logic

On the strength of two House of Commons by-election victories — Rochdale last October and Sutton and Cheam last December — and successes earlier this month which gave them a plurality on the governing council of Liverpool, Britain's Liberal Party is being discussed in terms of a phoenix, rising from its own ashes.

Liberal Leader Jeremy Thorpe has been moved to comment that his party, widely considered moribund, is "a vigorous corpse which refuses to lie down, and smites the Tory and Labor parties." This is brave talk from a leader whose party holds only eight seats in the 630-member Commons. But there exist some grounds for optimism. The soundest seems to be negative in character—the disenchantment of voters with both the Conservatives and the Laborites.

Encouraging the improvement in Liberal prospects, according to their supporters, is the image of Liberals as a "decent" political group, and probably contributing to the victories noted above is a modernized appeal compounded of grass-roots politics and showmanship.

The Liberal appeal is to people of good will with a variety of philosophies, but its breadth tends to make an unsuccessful mixture. Voters too frequently believe that a ballot for the Liberals is a lost vote, and at present only 10 per cent of Britons call themselves Liberals.

Optimism, however, has been a characteristic of British Liberal leaders in postwar years, exemplified in scholarly form by former leader Jo Grimond when he first took over the party's reins.

Against a background of disappointments, the concept of the Liberals becoming a potent third-party force in British politics in the early future seems nebulous. One swallow does not make a summer, but the three swallows of recent victories seem to be pretty heady.

Hitchhikers?

It will be a matter of satisfaction to old hands in the New Democratic Party that enrolment of new B.C. members has increased by 4,000 since October 31.

The point might be made by the government, however, that NDP membership should not necessarily be an automatic solution to personal unemployment problems even if it often seems that way.

A Favorable Frame for Talks

PARIS—The biggest event of the recent Kissinger-Brezhnev dialogue at first seemed a non-event. Despite widespread belief that a date would be fixed for the Soviet leader's United States trip, none was announced. It therefore came as welcome news that he will arrive in June as originally expected. A delay would have been too bad for both parties.

Brezhnev has staked his political head on improved relations with America and vastly increased trade. Russia needs this in order to face China and requires American credits, technology, grain and manufactures to overcome economic and agricultural difficulties.

The U.S.S.R. has learned in recent decades that Washington doesn't covet any Soviet-controlled areas and will never take offensive action against it, regardless of provocation. Therefore the latter-day record has been filled with statements similar to Brezhnev's (Nov. 13, 1972):

Improved Relations

"For our part we are prepared to continue the improvement that has begun in Soviet-American relations, to further develop reciprocally advantageous co-operation in different fields, based on the principles of peaceful co-existence."

Tangible steps have been taken to confirm this: for example, the United States-Soviet maritime treaty last October and this year's enormous deal between Moscow and the Occidental Petroleum group.

Brezhnev, convinced he is on the right track, has ruthlessly set about consolidating his power position in order to achieve his objectives. He has ousted adversaries from the hierarchy—above all Pyotr Shelest—and promoted key symbols of authority.

These included not only Marshall Grechko, the top soldier, and Foreign Minister Gromyko, the number one diplomat; they also included Yuri Andropov, head of the security apparatus. This last move is especially significant. Andropov is the first police boss since Beria (executed in 1953) to be a Politburo member. Moreover, Andropov has been in charge of a fairly successful campaign to throttle the recent wave of liberal dissidence.

Thus, personally, Brezhnev is in a good stance right now, certainly much better than that of President Nixon at home. Anti-Brezhnev factions of both right and left have been driven into the woodwork whereas anti-Nixon factions are having a field day in the United States.

LEONID BREZHNEV

Conceivably this tilt of the seesaw could have had its effect: the Soviet boss might have thought it advisable to postpone the meeting until certain he wouldn't be dealing with a lame duck.

Or perhaps the present Congressional obsession with Watergate could have further delayed prospects of authorizing Nixon's projected trade bill, making Brezhnev reckon there was too much risk of returning from Washington with little substantial to flaunt before adversaries.

Yet if Nixon is comparatively weaker in a political and personal sense, the United States is comparatively stronger in a national sense.

Slowly the balance of payments problem is starting to right itself. The economy is sound and, although inflation remains a curse, profits and productivity mount. Washington now has good relations with China and there is improvement on the horizon with West Europe.

In terms of this kind of comparison Brezhnev was impelled toward a visit sooner rather than later. Despite the highest farm price support cost in the world, Soviet agriculture just suffered a dramatic setback.

Moscow had to import 38 million tons of Western grain in 1972 and 1973 and more purchases are expected before harvests catch up with requirements. Distress slaughtering of unfed livestock is taking place.

To pay for food imports, the U.S.S.R. had to sell an estimated 10 per cent of its gold reserves last year, may equal that this year and has gone heavily into the Western financial market, including $2 billion from the Commodity Credit Corporation. Nor is agriculture the only problem.

Slower Growth

The Soviet Union's national income growth has shrunk from 10.9 per cent in the nineteen-fifties to 6.8 per cent during the last five years. The G.N.P. increase has declined from 6.4 per cent to 3 per cent, according to Western estimates. The dream of overtaking America is vanishing.

The United States has much it could and—under properly negotiated conditions—should do to establish massive trade normalization with the Soviet Union.

It would have been foolish for Brezhnev to take the bad gamble of postponing his Washington visit and failing to give ironclad reassurances to our Congress that Russia's Jewish emigration tax is permanently finished.

It would now be reckless were Congress to delay its responsibilities with regard to authorizing the essentials of proposed omnibus trade legislation because of Watergate.

ART STOTT

Theory Good, Practice Faulty

In theory, Canada's prisoner rehabilitation program has just about everything going for it. Economically it carries promise of helping the inmate, or the paroled person, to become self-supporting and contribute to the support of his dependents. Socially it should facilitate the return to normal law-abiding life of the offender ready for reformation. On humanitarian grounds it treats the prisoner as a human being, providing an opportunity for him to regain his self-respect and to become a contributor, instead of a burden, to decent citizens. When, or if, reformation takes place, a latent menace is removed from society.

Very few, if any, people will object to the principles involved.

But in this day and age it has to go beyond theory. It has to work. Too often it doesn't.

Character Defects

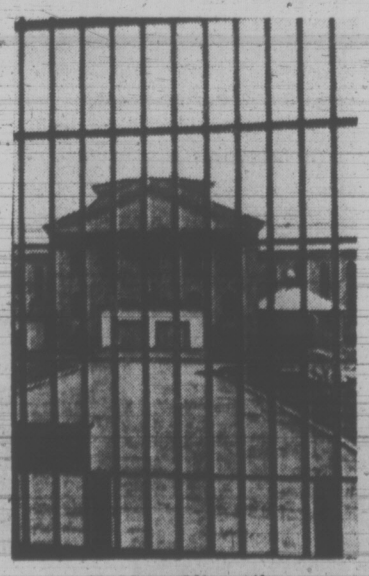
Part of its failure may be due to individual character defects. If all prisoners were automatically reclaimable, were willing to accept the responsibilities of citizenship as well as its benefits, the theory would be fully viable. They aren't. In most cases, the fact that they are prisoners indicates the commission of some anti-social act at which they were caught. Some of them — and it may be a minority, as statistics indicate — will never be able to make the transition back to decent, acceptable standards.

Convicted "con" men, according to some authorities, seldom make the necessary adjustment. They may be smooth enough to talk their way to parole, to create the impression that they are ready to return to society. But in innumerable cases, that capability is merely part of a "con" job they'll repeat when released with society as the victim. Some dangerous criminals, who apparently haven't developed to the stage where they can be safely left at large, are among others who won't make the grade.

The responsibility of those entrusted with the rehabilitative effort inevitably becomes one of judgment: Who should be recommended for and allowed parole? Who shouldn't?

Those prisoners granted conditional release who proceed to violate the regulations laid down for them — and again they may be a minority — indicate the inadequacy of someone's judgment in the process. And since rehabilitation has been so strongly stressed in recent years, with a consequent increase in clients and greater numbers to be judged, it seems apparent that Canada has not in the service at this time enough qualified persons to make adequate judgments.

A simple instance illustrates the situation. A prisoner with a bad record made application for parole. The application was buttressed by a report declaring him a model prisoner, a person who had made a mistake and acknowledged it and had decided to go straight. He was the victim of bad breaks in earlier life.



Dubious Alternative

One after another, officials viewed the case with sympathy, passed it along with recommendations that parole be granted. Finally it came into the hands of an official of long training, broad experience, and a rudimentary inclination to check out the details. Because of his competency he made an interesting discovery. The report that came to him was as favorable to the applicant as any could be. It should have been. The prisoner had written it himself, omitting any information which did him no credit. The application was rejected, but only because it happened to fall into the hands of a man who did his job. In other hands an unworthy applicant could have been released.

The rehabilitation theory's fine. So are a lot of others which haven't yet been successfully applied.

The federal government's decision to make a full probe of all prisons — and presumably the viability of some elements in the penal system — is an automatic response to public outcry against violation of regulations and the risks they create for society.

People in general are rebelling against what they consider excessive leniency to the offender. They're tired of hearing about inmates who overstay passes, or walk away from minimum security institutions to resume a fugitive life. They're angry about repeated crimes, some violent, by those illegally at liberty. In increasing numbers, they're in revolt against the application of a program which they feel provides inadequate protection for society.

Backlash

The backlash has occurred.

Something no doubt will be done. Paroles are not being granted now as freely as they were a year or two ago. Tighter regulations and more careful screening will have to be applied to applicants for day or weekend passes. Minimum security institutions will be made less minimum to avoid the casual walk-aways. David Lewis may call this the "hardrock, redneck" approach, but it's coming. And it's coming because a theoretically progressive and hopeful approach to rehabilitation has been inadequately executed.

But in the course of the backlash, one point cannot be ignored. A return to the harshness of earlier prison treatment will be self-defeating. It didn't work, either, as the recidivism of full-term convicts has proved.

A Nature Ramble With Skipper

FREEMAN KING

On the upper reaches of Island View Beach, once regularly washed by the tide and now under spray only when the tide is high and a south-easterly is driving in, a new habitat has been created.

Many plants are now established—the sea verbena, the sea peas of different hues, spikes of aromatic wormwood and even the pigweed from the prairies. Rice grass abounds and some of the clovers are there. Behind them, on the landward side, broom has taken hold and interspersed with it the wild rose blooms in delicate beauty.

Among trees that have taken root and appear to be thriving is the Pacific crab-apple, with its clusters of pinkish-white flowers. A person listening by them on a sunny day will hear hundreds of bees and other insects searching for nectar and pollen.

Recently I watched at least six types of bees, ranging from the large bumblebee to the domestic varieties that have been imported from Europe. Each displayed distinctive patterns and colors. Some were jet black and different species varied widely in size. Pollen collected on their legs so heavily in some cases that they were scarcely able to become airborne.

It was interesting to note how a bee would fly up to a blossom, hover and back away without landing and seek out another bloom. How did it know that the flower had been visited by another bee? Was it by sight or smell?

Many other insects were browsing among the flowers. Some were lacewinged, others apparently belonging to the carrion group. Each was looking for food in some way or another. All were part of the scheme of life, making their contribution to the development of fruit that will follow the blossoms and become the food of birds in the winter ahead.

On the ground, the fallen petals, their purpose accomplished, are breaking down under the action of fungi. They will return to the soil to nourish the parent tree.

The insects, carrying their harvest back to their "homes" to feed their offspring, will also be performing their allotted tasks to assure continuation of the cycles of nature.

Look Beyond

On a recent morning I conducted a funeral for a man our society might call a "skid road derelict"—in fact some of us may have other endearments. A little-known individual who may not have added much to society but he became a friend of mine.

In the small group that gathered to pay their final respects sat a group of young people; again society may have dubbed them "hippies". I saw them weep openly. At the end of the service they came as a group to view the remains, still weeping. A little girl (about 4 or 5) placed a small wild flower on the coffin (I put it in his buttonhole), another young person placed a handful of wilted flowers wrapped in paper on the coffin.

Somewhere along the line he had befriended these people and left a very precious gift, "love". It touched my life as nothing else ever has, so much so I have determined to look beyond man's condition, seeing the action of his heart.

In doing this I may find again a lot of the love which is missing in our Now generation.—Bruce Harcourt, 2855 Blackwood St.

Secrecy Problem Remains In Pentagon Papers Wake

By SANFORD J. UNGAR
The Washington Post

LOS ANGELES — "There remain more questions than answers," U.S. District Court Judge W. Matt Byrne Jr. said last week, as he dismissed all charges against Pentagon Papers defendants Daniel Ellsberg and Anthony J. Russo Jr.

The judge was talking about the incomplete investigation into how a burglary squad reporting to the White House and government wiretapper had violated Ellsberg's constitutional right.

But his expression of frustration could have been pronounced with equal force about the entire Pentagon Papers affair and the fundamental legal issues it raised. Although that affair has now come to a tentative conclusion after two years of complex litigation, many problems are unresolved.

The system of government secrecy that produced the Pentagon Papers and kept them from the public has been attacked and mocked in the courtroom, but remains intact.

Freedom of the press has not been advanced one iota by the dismissal of charges against Ellsberg and Russo, and it may still be bruised from the justice department's temporary success in stopping newspaper publication of the documents two years ago.

No balance has been struck, or happy medium found, to guide future relationships between government and the press on the issue of what "national security" information can legitimately be published and what can legitimately be kept classified.

Lack Safeguards

The federal government's powers to investigate citizens for alleged criminal conduct have been shown to be virtually without legal safeguards — with the Central Intelligence Agency prepared to ignore statutory restrictions and engage in domestic operations and the Federal Bureau of Investigation unable or unwilling to produce records of its own electronic surveillances.

There has been no pronouncement on whether "information" can be "stolen" from the government, nor has the legal definition of "espionage" been moved in one direction or the other.

In retrospect, it all appears to be a peculiar piece of recent American history — more political than legal — a rather embarrassing defeat for the Nixon administration, but not a clear-cut victory for anyone.

It began 23 months ago when the New York Times published articles based on the then secret history of U.S. involvement in Southeast Asia and infuriated the administration, which was just then working on President Nixon's overtures to China.

Under Mitchell

The justice department, at that time under the stewardship of Attorney-General John N. Mitchell (himself under criminal indictment now), moved for injunctions against the Times and, in their turn, the Washington Post, the Boston Globe and the St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Although the Supreme Court ruled on June 30, 1971, that the federal government had not met its burden in trying to justify a "prior restraint" on publication, some of the justices' opinions virtually invited the administration to take the route of criminal charges.

In the midst of the fight with the newspapers, Daniel Ellsberg, a former government policy researcher and a convert on the Vietnam war, was revealed to be the source of the leaked documents.

He was indicted for the first time even before the high court ruled on the civil suits.

In the course of trying to build its case before a federal grand jury here, the government sought the testimony of Russo, a long-time friend of Ellsberg while they both worked at the Rand Corp. in Santa Monica, who had helped him Xerox the Pentagon papers in 1969.

Russo resisted, was held in contempt-of-court and served more than six weeks in jail for his refusal to testify — the only time, it would turn out, that either defendant ever served in jail in connection with the Pentagon Papers affair.

When he continued to refuse to appear at a secret grand jury proceeding after being released from jail, Russo was added to a superceding indictment against Ellsberg in December, 1971.

That indictment included 14 counts charging espionage and theft of government property, as well as a unique conspiracy charge that accused Ellsberg and Russo of "defrauding" the United States out of its "lawful governmental function of controlling the dissemination of classified government studies, reports, memoranda and communications."

For the government, it was a simple, narrow case of theft and misuse of "guarded" documents.

But the defence told the jurors they had a unique opportunity to learn about and pass judgment on deception of the American people by the executive branch of government.

Several of the figures originally scheduled to testify for the prosecution had drifted away to other tasks during the long delay, so the government had to rely largely on two army generals to link the documents at issue with the "national defence," as required for conviction under the Espionage act.

The idea was that if the Pentagon Papers had fallen into the hands of a hypothetical "foreign analyst" working in intelligence, they would have caused "injury" to the United states and "advantages" to the foreign power.

ELLSBERG
. . . theft?

To contradict that view, the defence presented one witness after another — former government officials to satisfy Ellsberg's inclination toward the powerful, and more "radical" types who fit into Russo's view of the case as a "political trial."

Thus, the jurors heard not only from those who had helped presidents Kennedy and Johnson plan the American effort in Vietnam, but also from anti-war activists who had travelled to Hanoi in the midst of it.

To the last, the defence sought to persaude Judge Byrne to knock out the "conspiracy to defraud" part of the indictment, claiming it was an unconstitutional effort at "information control."

The theft charges were the toughest ones for the defence to deal with.

Although the prosecution never established that the copy of the Pentagon Papers removed from Rand by Ellsberg was worth more than $100 — as required for a felony conviction — there was simply no question that the document had been taken out and duplicated.

Accepting the facts, the defence came up with a complicated theory that the papers were not "government property" at all, but rather the "private papers" of three former defence department officials.

What is more, Ellsberg and Russo insisted that Rand's security regulations did not have the force of law.

Apparently, that approach worked on the jury. One juror, Cora C. Neal, summarized her view of the theft charge this way:

"They stole company property, not government property. And yet Ellsberg didn't steal it, he was authorized to have it. He lost his job . . . That was enough punishment."

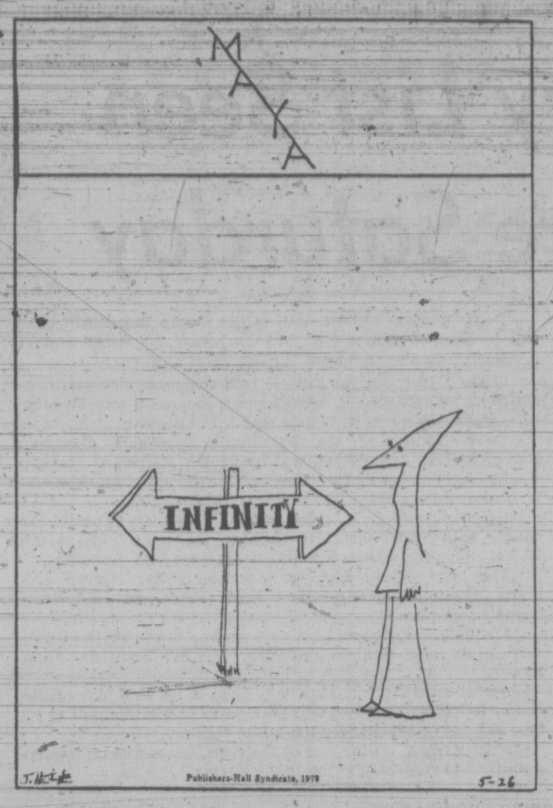
Never Answered

But the complicated questions in the case really went well beyond Ellsberg and Russo and the Pentagon Papers. They were never answered in part because government misconduct deprived the judge of his opportunity to instruct the jury on the meaning of "national defence" and other key terms.

There was never any decision on whether the federal government had properly used the law or abused it in the attempt to punish Ellsberg and Russo.

For their own part, the two defendants feel they were vindicated and that other potential "leakers" will be encouraged to follow what they did.

But some observers suggest that two years in court at a cost of almost a million dollars, even without a conviction, may have a substantial deterrent effect.



The Class Bias

THE GLOBE AND MAIL
An Editorial

It was illuminating for us all to gain the sociological insight into prison life provided by an official of the Canadian Penitentiary Service.

Referring to the six kidnappers of Mary Nelles — the last of whom, the ringleader, recently was released on early parole — the official noted how "exceedingly difficult" it was for inmates coming from the middle-class backgrounds of the kidnappers to "adjust" to prison life. But as the official went on to add: "I've known them all well and they all adjusted well while in jail."

Good for them.

But what about the misbegotten, degraded representatives of the lower class flung into jail each year? Are we to assume that they are not used to any better — probably not used to as much, poor wretches, and therefore adjustment for them is not so difficult or praiseworthy?

Had it been explained to us from the beginning that the Nelles kidnappers were "different" we would not have been confused while, one by one they were released months, years even, ahead of their nominal parole eligibility dates. We might have believed that the National Parole Board does not interfere with the courts' right to sentence — as proclaimed once more by board chairman George Street in an article published recently in Weekend magazine.

But we had only the words of the sentencing judge to go on. Summing up how the kidnappers broke into the Nelles house, assaulted Mr. Nelles, overpowered and bound his wife, kept her prisoner for 39 hours until their ransom demands were met, Mr. Justice Donald Morand told the court: "The main factor in this case is the question of deterrent." He handed out sentences ranging from 10 to 15 years. The kidnappers served sentences ranging from 20 months to 3½ years.

Has the National Parole Board determined that derrence need not apply to middle-class boys but only to lesser sorts?

Grits Go Back To Old Vintage

By GEOFFREY STEVENS
The Globe and Mail

OTTAWA — It's a bit like flipping back 10 years in history, but it's happening all the same. Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau is quietly building an election organization — and he is building it around a group of political professionals who ran the Liberal Party in the days of Lester Pearson.

The key figure is Senator Keith (The Rainmaker) Davey — the irrepressible former Liberal national organizer who was instrumental in rebuilding the party following the Conservative landslide of 1958 and who ran the party's campaigns in 1962, 1963 and 1965. For the past few weeks, Mr. Davey has been drifting around Ottawa and Toronto, talking to the Prime Minister and other senior Liberals.

Senator Davey won't say what he is doing, other than that he has accepted, at the Prime Minister's request, "certain organizational assignments." Party sources, however, confirm that Senator Davey is doing three things: planning campaign material for the next election; improving the party's public opinion surveying; and revamping Liberal advertising strategy.

One result is apt to be the severing of the Liberals' long-standing connections with MacLaren Advertising in Toronto and United States pollster Oliver Quayle. Many Liberals were unhappy with Mr. Quayle's political polling in the 1972 campaign and feel they need more sophisticated socio-political surveys. The party is quietly shopping for an advertising agency to replace or supplement MacLaren's.

Although insiders say Mr. Trudeau has not yet decided who will run the election campaign, they expect it will be Senator Davey. "I don't know if I'll be the campaign manager," says Senator Davey. "It's academic anyway because there is no election and I don't think there will be one for quite a while."

Among the Pearson-vintage Liberals whom Senator Davey is consulting are Toronto lawyer Gordon Dryden and James Coutts, a one-time assistant to Mr. Pearson, who has a consulting business in Toronto. Mr. Coutts, say Liberals in Ottawa, is involved in devising better polling methods and in the selection of an advertising agency. Mr. Coutts, however, says he has no official function in the party, and that he does not really consider himself to be involved. He says he met the Prime Minister at Mr. Pearson's funeral and told him his business would not leave enough time for him to play any formal role.

A fourth old Pearson hand back from the political wilderness is Vancouver's John Nichol who is analyzing key ridings and working to improve communications between Ottawa and Liberals in the constituencies, particularly in the West. Mr. Nichol, who resigned from the Senate last month, was national president of the party under Mr. Pearson.

The significance of the rehabilitation of Keith Davey and Co. is not lost on senior Liberals. It amounts to tacit recognition of the party's organizational bankruptcy in recent years. "One of the failures of the Trudeau organization," says a strategically placed Liberal, "was the failure to bring along young people who came to the party in 1968 and to develop them in the organization."

The recruitment of Senator Davey cannot be taken as evidence that the prime minister is on the verge of calling an election. Mr. Trudeau has told party officers he will not even set up a formal campaign committee, because to do so would undermine his efforts to make the minority Parliament work. At the same time, however, he recognized that he would be remiss if he did not set the election machinery quietly and informally in motion — just in case.

Some Liberals are nervous about the re-emergence of Senator Davey as a powerful figure in the organization. "A lot of people are not very keen on Keith Davey," says one of the 1972 campaign organizers. "Without going into personality traits, I think there is some reason not to go to a person whose contacts are 10 years old."

To which Keith Davey might well reply: better 10-year-old contacts than no contacts at all.

THE FOOT-ON-THE-FLOOR SYNDROME

Death No Deterrent to Indy Drivers

By KENNETH DENLINGER
The Washington Post

INDIANAPOLIS — The track announcer called for quiet and, "with deep regret," told the 250,000 race fans that "popular Art Pollard" had died of injuries suffered in a spectacular crash many of them had witnessed two hours earlier.

There was silence for perhaps a minute, then the announcer said: "Well, it's back to the challenge of speed, ladies and gentlemen . . ." and two dozen of Pollard's colleagues — one after the other — went hellbent around the track trying to qualify for the privilege of chasing each other 500 miles here May 28.

Pollard was the 51st person — and 33rd driver — to die in the 57 years of the Indianapolis 500. Usually, death brings a that's-part-of-racing response from the buffs and at least one let's-ban-this-senseless-sport column.

Now, though, many of the drivers — A. J. Foyt and Mario Andretti being two — are suggesting that the machines are too fast for the humans, especially at this 2½-mile oval whose dimensions are the same now as when it opened in 1909.

"The only constant in all of this is the human element," Andretti said shortly before qualifying with an average four-lap speed of 195.059 miles per hour. "At 150 miles an hour, we had maybe seven seconds to react to something. Now we have .8 seconds. It could be critical soon."

How fast is all of this? Imagine being strapped inside Andretti's No. 11 Parnelli-turbo Offy. At an average of 200 miles per hour, you would travel the entire 2½ miles in 45 seconds.

"At these speeds, it takes the equivalent of three football fields — about 300 yards — before the driver can even give any thought to what's happening," said Dr. Steve Olvey, assistant medical director at the Speedway hospital. "Anything within 300 yards is instinct — or luck."

Television does not nearly capture the sensation, because the cars mostly are coming directly toward the cameras. There is little of the whooosh effect that frightens some and is the major attraction for others.

Johnny Rutherford talked to a reporter around the track the other day, before he grabbed the coveted pole position for the 500 with record one-lap (199.071) and four-lap (198.413) performances.

"Turn no. 1 is a bit of a thread-the-needle situation," he said. "The grandstand narrows down and you've got to find the right strip very quickly and be right on the money to break out for the short straightaway burst.

"When everything's right, you don't have to lift into the second turn, although we're running a little higher (closer to the wall) because of the high speeds. On the straightaway, the buffeting from the wind and other cars can be a bit of a thrill.

"The third turn is a wind tunnel, where I have the most trouble. There's a slight bump, but I don't have too much problem with that. On the fourth turn, you come down a tunnel, so to speak, between the grandstand and that can be troublesome because there's a little hump as you come down the straightaway.

"There's one place where the wind gives you a little sashay and then you go right back and do it again."

Hardly anyone gets to see all the qualifying runs of the entire 500-mile race, even in the high penthouse seats that go for $40. Yet the appeal of Indy is overwhelming for so many.

Drivers have averaged more than 200 miles per hour on other closed courses. Jerry Grant did 201.414 at Ontario, Calif., last year and Bobby Unser turned a record 212.766 at the Texas World Speedway this year. But no one has done it at Indy, and so the prevailing attitude here is that it has never happened.

Dick Simon's is a low-budget operation compared to many at Indy, and he was using his third engine during qualifying. Ninety minutes before his run, the car backed over his left heel and probably broke a bone. There was no time to find out.

As usual, his wife, Mary Ann, cried throughout a four-lap run in which Simon qualified at 191.276. "I know he can do it," she said later. "I'm always terrified something breaks loose in the car. There've been so many of those things."

At Phoenix once, Simon suffered burns near his hip that bore almost to the bone. He completed the race, then passed out. But any driver with enough competition at nearly every level will have his own special ugly incident.

It was not too many years ago that Jim Malloy, Billy Foster, Art Pollard and Dick Simon were tearing up tracks together in the Northwest. Pollard's death established a pattern that should have jolted Simon into racing abstinence, but didn't.

"Jim was killed here last year, Billy was killed at Riverside in a stock-car race and now Art," said Simon, just minutes before he would try — unsuccessfully, for the moment — to qualify for his fourth 500.

"You have to think, 'What's wrong, what's happening?' But there's only two things that could have happened to Art. Either he lost it or something broke. But I'm not gonna lose it and nothing's gonna break.

"If I can't have a challenge, I shouldn't be here." He looked skyward and said, "I leave it up to someone else."

Simon's attitude seems the prevailing one among the drivers here. If there were no fast cars, he would be deep into other adventures.

At 39, Simon has tried skiing and pole-vaulting, boat racing and flying. One year he was the best parachutist and the best auto driver in Utah, and also sold more insurance than any man in the state.

"There is no other sport, no other track, no other business that offers the challenge of Indianapolis," he insists. "It is the greatest spectacle in sports. The first time you bring a car in here your legs give just a little and the perspiration flows. And there's not a person in the stands."

The prestige and $1 million plus purse is the driver lure at Indy, and the customers are probably better able to identify with the Simons and Foyts, Andrettis and Unsers than any other athletes.

A man sees himself as Mickey Mantle, Jerry West or Joe Namath just for an instant. Then he looks at his out-of-shape frame and the fantasy clicks off. But nearly everyone has at least driven a car, and nearly everyone can imagine going full throttle past the grandstand in Indy.

For all their other considerable skills, the dominant one among racers is the ability to keep the right foot on the floor longer than anyone else.

Record Entry List Seen For Swiftsure Saturday

By PAT DUFOUR
Times Staff

This year's Swiftsure, set for next Saturday, promises to be the biggest of them all.

With the deadline still three days away, 190 boats have already been registered and, as race chairman Frank Piddington says, "We have always had a flood of entries at the end!"

The Swiftsure, which had its beginnings in 1930, draws competitors from all along the Pacific coast and as far inland as Calgary.

It also draws the biggest gallery of onshore boosters of any race in the area.

The 136.2-mile race out to the Swiftsure Bank and back is not one to be treated lightly. It can present conditions that break masts like matchsticks.

It can present drifters that are just as tough on crews' morales.

Endless Summer, George O'Brien's 12-metre (the former America's Cup contender Dame Pattie) will be back to defend her title.

She smashed all records in 1972, barrelling over the finish line near the Ogden Point breakwater about 9:30 a.m. on the Sunday.

She'll have to hustle to hold on to her crown. There are other well-known winners readying for the big one of the year.

Recently returned from Australia, Lol Killam will be helming Greybeard, the boat which won him the 1970 Victoria-Maui race.

His brother, Bill, who won the 1968 Victoria-Maui, will be competing in Porpoise III.

Another top skipper from the Royal Vancouver Yacht Club in this year's Swiftsure will be Bonar Davis, sailing his specially modified Hyak.

Seattle architect John Graham, whose Maruffa held the Swiftsure record for 15 years, will be racing his Palmer Johnson 37 Elixir.

One of the biggest threats to Endless Summer's crown is John Newton's C and C 34 Pachena of the West Vancouver Yacht Club. She's won the two biggest races of the season to date — the Seattle Yacht Club's Great Equalizer and the Strait of Georgia classic.

Bill Buchan of the Corinthian Yacht Club is no skipper to be written off lightly, either. He's entered his Ranger 37 Bydand.

Other favorites back are:

David Nielsen's Moonglow IV of the Tacoma Yacht Club, Bruce Hendrick's Six Pack of Rose City Yacht Club in Portland, Ore., J. C. Baillargeon's Mistral of the Seattle Yacht Club and, one of the greatest campaigners of them all, Henry Kotkins' Diamond Head.

Louis Lindholm's Moonraker will be having another try at Swiftsure. The Royal Victoria Yacht Club entry was the highest-placing Victoria entry in 1972, coming second in her division and 14th over-all. Another RVYC entry is Bob Horner's Pandora.

Start time for the Swiftsure classic will be 9:30 a.m. off Brotchie Ledge on a line set between the navy's HMCS Porte de la Reine and the U.S. coast guard cutter Point Bennett.

The smaller boats, racing the 75.6-mile Juan de Fuca to Clallam Bay and back, will get their start 15 minutes later.

A bumper crop of Vancouver Island entries are in this one.

From the Royal Victoria Yacht Club they include:

Jan Huibers' Sea Spell, Bill Leach's Limelight, Bert Buchanan's Lairig Ghru, Steve Merriman's Vandal who won her division last year, George Dufour's Galenaia II, Shaun Peck's Neptune, Greg Oliver's Departure, Hugh Porter's Errigal and Archie Campbell's Ligero.

Peter White's White Squall of the Maple Bay Yacht Club will be back to defend her 1972 win when she came first in division C, Pacific Handicap Racing Fleet section.

Other MBYC entries include Don Gladman's Skaga, Gordie Inglis' Water Melon, Mike Stone's Moccasin and Two-for-One, skippered by R. R. Wilson and J. V. Coleman.

Dave Gasser of the Esquimalt Squadron, Canadian Forces Sailing Association, will be racing Meikedae. Nanimo Yacht Club entries include Norman Martin's Vol-Au-Vent and W. G. Dey's Deydream II.

Helping Porte de la Reine and Point Bennett to patrol the course and report positions back to the main plot at the RVYC clubhouse will be four power cruisers from the club.

They are Oliver Summer's Summer Star, Gerry Williams' Shelimar, Bob Smith's Scott Free and Bill Trenholme's Sayonara.

Porte de la Reine will act as rounding mark for the Swiftsure boats and Endless Summer, for the Juan de Fuca racers.

Aerial spotting will also help keep a correct plot of the boats. Relatives of crews will be able to phone the club at either 592-2441 or 592-2442 for the latest reports.

Friday night, on the eve of the race, boats will be packed gunwhale to gunwhale in the Inner Harbor.

BCMA Chief Lances 'Medical Reformers'

VANCOUVER (CP) — The outgoing president of the B.C. Medical Association made a strong attack on medical reformers Friday and his right to make the attack was defended by one of the reformers.

Dr. David Bachop told the annual BCMA meeting that the reformers showed "immaturity, lack of judgment and political ineptitude whe dealpolitical ineptitude when dealing with the government," and were "totally unsuitable to become a majority group within our profession."

One of the reformers, Dr. Kenneth Hill, president-elect, said: "I disagree with Dr. Bachop but he has his rights to say what he thinks and feels, as I have a right to say what I think and feel."

Vice-President-elect Dr. Fred Ceresney said the reformers want the medical profession to be strong and that means well-informed.

He asked some 150 physicians present how many had received an up-to-date copy of the BCMA constitution.

When only eight raised their hands, he asked: "Is that any way to run an organization?"

Later Ceresney thanked Bachop for his views.

Bachop also said the medical profession "had better move quickly" to correct the disillusionment of the public.

He said if each member of the public esteems his own doctor but dislikes the profession as a whole, "we must ask ourselves why."

"Somehow our public image is being damaged, we are becoming a political football perhaps, or a convenient whipping boy."

The BCMA general assembly passed a formal resolution asking the provincial and federal governments to work with the U.S. government to curb indiscriminate advertising of pills, sprays and lotions.

Dr. Robert Peet, chairman of the BCMA's health planning council, said in his written report: "Every day children and adults are bombarded with advice and conditioning by the idiot box and other media to pop a myriad of pills into their mouths, and a variety of sprays, lotions and such like not only for the different surface areas, but for every orfice of the body."

He said it was not surprising people so conditioned "abuse themselves with nonmedical drugs."

Murder Accused Treated for Cuts

A 17-year-old Saanich girl, charged with the non-capital murder of her mother, was treated for cuts at Royal Jubilee Hospital before she was taken into custody by the Victoria police jailer, B.C. Supreme Court was told Friday.

The trial of Jo Ann Brenda Anderson, 10-4060 Cedar Hill X Rd., charged March 9 after the fatal stabbing of Shirley Anderson, 38, entered its fifth day Friday.

Mr. Justice R. A. Wootten dismissed the jury of seven men and five women until 10:30 a.m. Tuesday.

Saanich police Det. William Hillcoat testified he first saw Jo Ann at 6:15 p.m. March 9.

She was lying on a cot in the ladies lounge of the police station, said Hillcoat. "She was very quiet."

An ambulance waiting at the rear of the police station took her to hospital for treatment.

"Would it be fair to say that when you first saw her, and on the way to the hospital she was quiet and withdrawn?" asked defence counsel Cecil Branson.

"Yes, she was," replied Hillcoat.

The officer testified Jo Ann was much brighter and "talkative" after she left the hospital.

Victor Williams, a local pawn broker, testified Jo Ann and another girl, Lori Drage, 22, went to his shop on Johnson Street March 9 between 10:30 and 11 a.m.

The other girl pawned several pieces of silverware for $4, said Williams.

Earlier in the trial Sgt. Anthony Clarke testified an incomplete set of silverware was found on the dining room floor at the scene of the stabbing.

Brian Hodgson, a scientist from the RCMP Crime Detection Laboratory in Vancouver testified there was no alcohol in blood samples he'd tested that had been taken from the scene of the stabbing.

Boycott Discouraged

Trade unionists in western Canada should not boycott Dare Foods products, a union spokesman said Friday.

A national boycott of the company's products has been urged by the Canadian Labor Congress and the position was endorsed by the Victoria Labor Council at its May 2 meeting.

But Shirley Garrett, president of Local 475 of the Bakery and Confectionery Workers, said the western market is served from the Surrey plant near Vancouver which has just signed a contract with the union.

The CLC boycott was in response to a year-old strike at the Kitchener, Ont., plant by another union, the brewery workers.

Mrs. Garrett said the CLC's boycott had resulted in an 8-to-10 per cent drop in production at the Surrey plant. Of 75 employees, 35 have been reduced to working one or two days a week, she said.

"There has been a breakdown in communications. We have been in touch with the CLC to try to get the boycott lifted in the west," she said.

By AL FORREST
Times Staff

Sooke Forest Products Ltd., is loading more than 14 million board feet of lumber aboard the Norwegian vessel Norbeth at Ogden Point, believed to be the first time production from a single mill has completely loaded a ship at one dock.

The lumber, with a wholesale value of $2.3 million, is bound for the New York area.

Company president Hershell A. Smith Friday told a meeting at the Union Club the lumber going aboard the Norbeth was more than all the lumber used in all the houses in Sooke.

It represents six weeks' production from the Sooke lumber mill. A similar load is planned about the end of June.

Ewen Fraser, shipping official for MacMillan Bloedel, told the meeting he could not recall a previous case in B.C. when one company completely loaded a vessel at one port with production from one mill.

In Vancouver, Seaboard exports lumber from various companies at the same time.

Smith said loading of the Norbeth, which started Wednesday, would be completed by Sunday.

Average loading pace is 50,000 board feet per hold per hour, the most efficient rate in the province, he said.

The company could remember when 52 suppliers would load a single vessel in 30 days and now one company was loading a ship in five.

As well, the company owns Westcan Terminal and Westcan Stevedoring. The latter company hires up to 160 men for dock work.

J. A. Baines, manager of the main Victoria branch of the Bank of Montreal, told the meeting citizens and public officials who complain about lumber trucks should realize the importance they hold for the community.

He said Sooke Forest Products, with a monthly payroll of one-third of a million dollars, produces a $1.5 million monthly payroll for the whole community in terms of an employment multiplier.

Other jobs which spin off from the company's activities are trucking, construction, tugs and other marine activities and the service industries.

He said the community should do everything possible to encourage indigenous industries like forestry products, shipping and fishing.

Fraser, of MacMillan Bloedel, told the meeting he had just returned from a tour of lumber purchasers from Texas to New England and found inventories low at the docks but high in construction firms in eastern U.S.

He said as a result of the high inventories in the hands of American construction companies, some dip in lumber prices had been noticed.

Fraser said the decline was not extensive and was not expected to last more than a few weeks.

"In this business prices are fluctuating all the time," he said. "A slight drop is nothing to get excited about."

He said current estimates are that the prices will rise again in the third quarter of this year.

Fraser said a major reason for the high inventories, as well as a slight dip in the pace of housing starts, is severe weather on the eastern coast and in the south.

Severe flooding conditions has hindered rail shipments of lumber to purchasers at interior points.

This condition would correct itself by summer.

Fraser said it was easy for people living in Victoria and Vancouver to forget that weather can cause a marketing problem in other areas.

Before the reception, Sooke Forest Products organized a tour of the Norbeth during loading.

Captain Pareli Soergard said the Norbeth is 587 feet long and weights 28,420 tons deadweight.

It has six holds and loads a variety of goods from forestry products to cars.

The Norbeth is owned by the HBS Group, a consortium involving money from several countries, mainly Norway and the United Kingdom.

Sooke Forest Products has hired Anglo Canadian Shipping Company Ltd. of Vancouver to handle the loading operations.

Bob Weinberg, cargo superintendent for Anglo Canadian, said the Norbeth had never loaded more than 14 million board feet of lumber but this time would probably put 14.2 million board feet or more aboard.

The heavy load was possible because the standard-sized lumber could be packed efficiently and stability was not a serious factor because the ship is not headed across ocean.

From Victoria the Norbeth will head south ot the Panama Canal and begin unloading near Baltimore.

Weinberg said it is costing him $6,600 per day to lease the vessel from its owners and he charges Sooke Forest Products a flat rate per thousand for shipping.

When lumber prices are high, crews work a lot of overtime but when prices sag they just work regular hours.

This policy is followed because labor is a constant factor while ships are expensive when demand for lumber is high and relatively cheap when prices sag and demand is lower, Weinberg said.

HUGE LOAD of lumber worth $2.3 million wholesale goes aboard Norbeth at Ogden Point docks for shipment to eastern United States. The lumber all came from Sooke Forest Products mill at Sooke. The company will ship all the vessel can hold, more than 14 million board feet.

$25,000 PAID FOR FARM PROBE

The provincial government has provided $25,000 from the provincial treasury to go towards an economic study of priority areas within the B.C. agricultural industry.

A special warrant authorizing expenditure of the money was included in cabinet orders which were released Friday.

The money will be routed through the B.C. Federation of Agriculture, which will itself conduct the study.

During the heated debate in the recent session of the legislature over the Land Commission Act, Premier Barrett invited the BCFA to conduct its own study of B.C. farming and said the province would pick up the tab.

The premier has also promised legislation at the fall session which will improve the farmer's lot in society.

Also contained in the cabinet orders was an order proclaiming certain sections of the Land Commission Act, the Mineral Land Tax Act and amendments to the Municipal Act.

Indian Plan Lauded

VANCOUVER (CP) — Secretary of State Hugh Faulkner gave a strong measure of encouragement to the Indian Friendship Centre movement Friday, and reminded Indians that there is still hard work to be done.

In a prepared speech to the National Association of Friendship Centres conference here, Faulkner complimented the association on the "remarkable story" of its expansion to 40 centres from Quebec to British Columbia in 15 years, saying they had dramatized the needs of native people.

"In specific and human terms you have demonstrated the conclusion that the established and traditional programs and agencies, whether government or private, are not effectively meeting the needs of these people," he said.

". . . However, I am fully aware that this story has only begun, that with the rate of migration of native people to towns and cities on the rise and with the increasing complexity of urban society, the work still to be done is formidable, your people are still ending up in our bars and our jails."

Pair's Exceptional Acting Highlight of 'Butterflies'

By AUDREY JOHNSON
Times Staff

Two exceptional young actors are gracing the Victoria Theatre Guild stage at Langham Court for the next few days.

Their names are Francine Wurster and David Regehr and they are the chief protagonists in Leonard Gershe's funny, touching play, Butterflies Are Free, which opened an eight-day run Friday.

Gershe has a fine turn for crisp, natural sounding dialogue and a pleasing wit that makes even his pun-lines forgiveable.

The story is simple and uncluttered except for a phoney happy ending that makes one wonder whether such a gifted author didn't really intend the play to end one minute sooner.

It has been lightly directed by Robert Price and suitably designed by Anabel Cranstoun.

But in the long run this is a two-person play and everything depends on the casting of those central roles.

The undoubted success therefore, of this production, is largely due to the outstanding ability of Regehr and Miss Wurster.

As the over-sheltered blind youth determined to make it on his own, Regehr plays with taste and sensitivity.

Born sightless, according to the script, he conveys the knowledge that he is at ease with his blindness, but at the same time convinces us of the conndition. His performance has mod, subtlety, refinement and warmth.

Having seen Miss Wurster's wholly convincing performance as the fortyish sadistic battle-axe nurse Ratched in One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest at the Phoenix Theatre a few months ago, one finds all the more striking her portrayal of the flitter-brained, juvenile but appealing Jill of Butterflies.

It is an uneven performance, for the character now and then slips out of control (the director has not helped here), but it is at its considerable best, admirable and shining with talent.

The monotony and light sense of strain that develops at these points are due in large part to limitation of vocal range and to the need for a somewhat more flexible pacing.

Mike Stephen makes a too-brief appearance in a delightfully done character part.

Some Hobby Profits Taxable—Others Escape

Your Taxes

Despite the tenacity with which we've approached tax reform in Canada over the past decade, many areas of the tax law still remain confused, while in other areas long-standing inequities remain.

Some of the inequities work against the taxpayer, while others work against the revenue department.

One of the areas still in need of clarification is the tax treatment of profits or losses that arise from carrying out a hobby. There is a certain lack of consistency in the tax law here.

For example, under the tax reform law, if one meticulously builds up a stamp collection, or a collection of antiques, as a hobby, and then loses interest in the hobby and sells his collection, making a substantial gain over his original cost, he faces a capital gains tax.

On the other hand, it appears that one can still buy a ticket on a sweepstake, or make a huge gambling profit without facing the risk of a capital gains tax.

The employee who wins a prize from his employer for submitting the best idea in a contest for improving company efficiency, will likely have the value of the prize added to his income. Yet if he wins the office pool on the Grey Cup game, making an equal amount, he won't pay tax.

The problem of taxing or not taxing casual or incidental profits has always been with us, and probably always will be a cloudy area for tax authorities.

Consider a recent case decided a few weeks ago by the tax review board, dealing with profits from racing one's own horse, as a hobby. Canadian taxpayers who make profits racing their cars, showing their antique tractor collection, or otherwise indulging in hobby sidelines which make them extra money, will take great comfort from this decision.

The facts of the case were not in dispute between the taxpayer and the tax collector, but only the tax result that flowed from those facts. And the principle decided by the case would presumably apply to similar kinds of cases which occur by the thousands each year in Canada.

The taxpayer in this case was a woman married to a farmer. Her parents had farmed, and at the age of 20 she married her childhood sweetheart who lived on a nearby farm. Her husband eventually bought out his father's farm and they settled into the business of farming, raising 10 children besides their crops.

In 1959, her father died, leaving her an inheritance of $1,000. With that money, her husband bought her a race horse at an auction. The horse, called So Long Prince, as a race horse didn't have an impressive record. He was already five years old and had lost all of the 23 races he had run. Nevertheless, she decided to buy the horse, train it and let her children ride the horse in the annual races which are part of rural Canadian life.

Two of her sons took a real interest in the horse, and he became the family hobby, with the two boys riding him more and more for larger and larger purses.

Apparently the horse responded to the affection showed him by the family, and over the next nine years won a total of $103,397.

So Long Prince retired at the age of 14 and was still living as the family pet when the case came to court.

The department of national revenue took the position that with winnings of over $100,000 in nine years, the taxpayer was not indulging a hobby, but rather was conducting a horse racing business, and therefore the profits from that business should be taxed.

The taxpayer, on he other hand, argued that there was precedent in the law which said that casual profits gained from pursuing a hobby could not be taxed, just as losses from indulging that hobby were not deductible expenses.

The tax proposition is probably sound, because it is likely that more money is lost indulging hobbies than is made, and therefore the tax officials are better off with that principle being in effect. However, the difficulty always arises in determining when a hobby is no longer a hobby but is actually a business venture.

In this case, the trial judge, board member Roland Ste. Onge, was a considerably experienced tax judge.

He carefully reviewed the entire course of conduct of the taxpayer, including the reasons why the horse had been bought, the fact that it had only been raced by the sons of the taxpayer, that the taxpayer had only the one horse and had not tried to develop a stable of winners, as a prudent racehorse-business venture might encourage, that the horse was never sold, even though that is the pattern in the horse racing business, and that in fact, when the horse became too old to race, it was retained as a family pet.

All of these circumstances led Ste. Onge to the conclusion that the main purpose of racing the horse was to indulge a hobby, and that this would have taken place regardless of whether or not the horse won or lost. Thus, he concluded the profits were not profits from a business, but were casual and incidental gains made in pursuing a hobby, and were not taxable.

It is not known whether or not the tax department will appeal the case to a higher court. That isn't likely, inasmuch as only a little more than a year ago, the federal court, to which an appeal might be launched, made a decision in a similar horse racing case, and ruled there, as well, that the profits were profits from a hobby and were not taxable.

The decision is probably sound in law, but still leaves a number of questions about our tax system. The university student who indulges his hobby, playing the guitar on weekends at school dances, is required to report and pay tax on that hobby income; the weekend prospector who makes a mineral find while enjoying his hobby of communing with nature will likely pay tax on his prospecting hobby profits. The question is: Where does one draw the line?

The line is difficult to see, and a lot of taxpayers would likely agree that $100,000 is a lot of money to earn over a period of nine years without having to pay any tax on it.

Mud Obscures Reason No New Wells in B.C.

By AL FORREST
Times Business Editor

It is too early in the season to try to assess the effects of provincial government policies upon the level of British Columbia oil and gas production, according to the provincial department of mines and petroleum resources.

Commenting on published reports that there have been no new wells in B.C. since the end of April, an official said:

"I would be surprised if there had been. It is a sea of mud up there. There is seldom any activity up there at this time of year."

In the peak season January, February and March there were 96 wells spudded, compared with 107 in the same period the previous year.

The official said the change could be the result of winter weather conditions and the department considered development to date to be normal.

Because of the time needed to prepare drilling programs, it would be at least October before any changes in activity might be noted as a result of government actions.

The petroleum industry has warned that higher royalties for crude oil will lead to a decline of the province's production.

Meanwhile, other provinces are reporting greatly increased activity.

Alberta completed 1,158 wells in the first four months of 1972, compared with 732 a year ago.

More wells were also completed in Saskatchewan and in the Northwest Territories.

Meanwhile, total footage drilled in B.C. to the end of April was 489,171 feet, compared with 772,539 feet in the same period last year. Footage was down in January, February, March and April compared to each individual month in 1972.

Forecast production for the first seven months of 1973 is an average of 66,763 barrels per day compared to 73,300 barrels per day in the same period last year.

Meanwhile, the forecast for production in all of Canada is 2 million barrels per day for the first seven months, an increase of 24 per cent over 1972.

Cocke Mulling Open Meetings

Health Minister Dennis Cocke said Friday he would want to give the question a good deal of thought before deciding whether or not to order hospital boards to open their meetings.

He was asked to comment on a Times story earlier this week which noted that while Victoria General Hospital holds board meetings open to the press, Royal Jubilee's board meetings are always behind closed doors.

Cocke said he personally believes a hospital can benefit from a close relationship with its community and open board meetings may be one way to achieve this.

But under the current system, hospitals in B.C. have a good deal of autonomy, he said.

While there is a principle involved in having open board meetings of public institutions like hospitals, there is also a principle involved in having them retain their autonomy.

Forcing hospitals to have open board meetings would be a long step towards reducing that autonomy, Cocke said.

WATERGATE IMMORTALIZED BY A CAVE

By SUSAN RUTTAN
Times Staff

The Watergate affair has been immortalized by Canada's most active group of cavers.

The University of Victoria Caving Club has named its recently-discovered cave in the Lake Cowichan area Watergate Cave, after the Nixon administration scandal.

The cave, also called Cascade Cave, is judged by club members to be the second largest explored cave on the island, after Hobbit Hole Cave near Port Alberni.

"It's still not fully explored yet," said caver Paul Griffiths, who first stumbled on the cave three weeks ago on an exploration trip.

One of the rooms in the cave is 85 feet high and there's a 30-foot waterfall in it, said Griffiths.

Big as Watergate is, it may be surpassed by another cave in the same area that the club is just beginning to explore, he said.

The 40-member UVic Caving Club is the only chapter of the Canadian Speleological Society, which was formed this year with Griffiths as president.

Speleology is the exploration and scientific study of caves. Cavers are sometimes called spelunkers.

The rest of the society's 185 members are individual caving enthusiasts scattered across the country. However, most people who like to explore caves come to B.C. to do it, said Griffiths, because the best caves are here.

"Vancouver Island is known from here to Florida as the island of caves," he said, because the island has a lot of limestone deposits in which caves are found.

The UVic club has listed 372 limestone caves on the island known to be over 50 feet in length.

Exact locations of caves such as the Watergate Cave aren't disclosed for fear inexperienced people without proper equipment will go into them.

Hard hats, coveralls, ropes and lights are standard equipment for cavers, and an exploration party has a minimum of three people, said Griffiths.

A surface party is left outside the cave in case of trouble, and someone in town always knows where the group has gone, he said.

Griffiths and his group have several projects planned for the near future. Griffiths is hoping to lead an expedition to southeast Turkey this summer to see giant caves there.

They are also trying to organize an expedition to caves near Virginia Falls, Northwest Territories. And Griffiths is writing two books, one on caving in Canada and another on caving on Vancouver Island.

The club meets each Thursday at 8:30 p.m. in the Oak Bay Sports Club, 1928 Oak Bay Ave.

Camosun Plans Six-Month Selling Course

At the request of local businessmen, a six-month course in "the art of selling" will be offered at Camosun College this September.

It's one of three new courses to be offered at the community college in the fall semester.

A two-year program in the theatre arts will be established in co-operation with Bastion Theatre and the first year of a two-year B.C. Institute of Technology course in hotel-motel management will be offered.

A dental assistant course scheduled for next year has been postponed until September, 1974, because of the high cost of acquiring new equipment for the course.

Dozens of new courses are being considered by the college and plans are progressing for establishment of a registered nurse diploma program.

Student services director Gordon Hartley said plans for the nursing school will depend on the availability of faculty, facilities and funding but a target starting date of 1975 has been set.

Other courses likely to be offered in the near future include a business program for retired armed forces officers; training in the insurance field; veterinarian assistance; training in social services; public administration, and construction and mechanical technicians.

BEFORE THE JUDGE

An 18-year-old who kept $100 after endorsing a forged cheque was given an 18-month probationary term in provincial court Friday.

Allan Douglas Mortimer, address not known, pleaded guilty Thursday to a Victoria fraud charge, dating from April 9.

He endorsed a stolen pension cheque for $542.50, and then kept $100 of the proceeds. The balance went to his friend, who stole the cheque last November, said Crown prosecutor Walter Anderson.

"His problems would be better treated outside of a correctional setting," said Ostler, deciding against imprisonment for Cross.

Victor Van Alstyne, of 692 Donovan, was found guilty of the Colwood charge, on a fraudulent welfare claim for December 1972. His four-month sentence is to be followed by 18 months' probation.

A 19-year-old Campbell River man's emotional problems may be cured by a six-month probationary term ordered by Judge William Ostler.

Steven F. Cross, released Thursday after three weeks' psychiatric observation, had pleaded guilty to an April 5 charge of possession of MDA and hashish.

LEFT TURN ON RED CAN BE LEGAL

Left turns on a red light are legal — if the driver is turning on to a one-way street, a Victoria police spokesman said today to clarify a situation he said was confusing Victoria motorists.

Most drivers are aware it is legal in British Columbia to turn right on a red light when the road is clear, Insp. Brooke Douglass, head of the traffic division, said, but few appear to realize left turns on a red light are also permitted, when the conditions are right.

The turn is legal when:
The driver is turning on to a one-way street;
There is no traffic approaching him;
He turns into the nearest lane.

ALAN F. WRIGHT

The appointment of Alan F. Wright as Sales Manager — Ready Mix Concrete and Aggregate is announced by Mr. Claude O. Butler President of BUTLER BROTHERS SUPPLIES LTD.

Mr. Wright has been connected with the supply of these products for the past 27 years in Victoria and latterly in Vancouver. With his return he looks forward to a re-acquaintance with the Construction Industry in the Greater Victoria Area.

$1 Million Drive

A fund drive to raise more than $1 million for scholarships and capital funds for Brentwood College School in Mill Bay will get under way this fall, a spokesman said Friday.

The fund will provide scholarships and bursaries to allow students whose parents cannot afford Brentwood's fees to attend the school, fund drive vice-chairman Sir Michael Butler said.

The aim is to have from one-quarter to one-half the school's enrolment as scholarship and bursary students, Butler said.

"There are a few now, but not nearly as many as we'd like," he said. Brentwood's fees — nearly $3,000 a year for a boarder — deter many parents.

First scholarships are to be available in the autumn of 1974.

The co-educational private school has 250 students, mainly boys.

Sales Whiz Indicted

ORLANDO, Fla. — Supersalesman Glenn W. Turner and famed criminal lawyer F. Lee Bailey were indicted Friday by a federal grand jury on charges of conspiracy and mail fraud in their promotion of Turner's motivational courses and cosmetics sales operations.

The indictments were returned by the same grand jury that last week indicted Los Angeles attorney Donald Segretti and a Tampa accountant on charges of conspiring to distribute a phony campaign letter accusing Sens. Hubert Humphrey and Henry Jackson of sexual misconduct during Florida's 1972 presidential primary.

LAS VEGAS — Thomas A. (Amarillo Slim) Preston has lost his bid to retain his title in a $130,000 hold 'em game being played in the fourth annual World Series of Poker here.

Slim, of Amarillo, Tex., was edged out of the game shortly before midnight Thursday night when he lost a $9,000 pot to Jack (Tree Tops) Strauss, Houston, Tex. Preston had won the title, as well as $60,000, in a 38-hour hold 'em game a year ago.

RESIGNING: Karl Ancerl has decided to resign as conductor and music director of the Toronto Symphony Orchestra when his contract expires in 1975. Ill health is the reason.

TORONTO — An 84-year-old Scarborough man known as "the checker king of Canada" won $60,000 Friday in a lottery and vowed to give all of it away.

"I just might buy myself one of those fancy $15 checkerboards," said Albert Wheeler who already owns 30 checkerboards and writes a daily column about the game.

"Oh, my goodness, I don't need all that money," said the widower, a five-time checkers champion of Canada, when he learned he had won first prize in the Stanley Cup hockey lottery called Score With Mental Health.

School officials announced Friday that Greg Wellman's case had been resolved even though requests for financial aid from nearly 7,000 other students would not be decided until mid-summer.

Allan Smith, vice-president for academic affairs, said the teen-ager's request was approved early "because of the widespread interest in the situation." Smith said financial help for the boy would be divided between gifts and loans.

Smith refused to disclose the amount of aid, saying such information must come from the Wellman family.

TORONTO — Sondra Fink of Toronto was awarded $2,777 in Ontario Supreme Court for injuries she suffered in a skiing accident in April, 1970. The judgment by Madam Justice Mable Van Camp was against Paul Greenlaus, 21, also of Toronto, who was found guilty of skiing recklessly when he and Mrs. Fink collided on a slope in Collingwood, Ont.

Mrs. Fink's injuries included a broken leg.

How to Take Wonderful Travel and Holiday Pictures

Change of pace, that's the thing to strive for. Don't leave your camera at the check room when you visit a local museum, art gallery or local indoor attraction. A tripod and meter will give you interior pictures of parts of the building, close-ups of exhibits, dramatic slides of colored statues in some churches maybe, and all sorts of attractive shots to mingle with outdoor scenics that become so tiring if unrelieved by some variety. Another way to change the pace is to shoot a place of interest at changing distances. First a complete square, then a statue in the square, finally a close-up shot of a pigeon on the statue.

Your Certified Photographic Counsellors will be glad to help you.

The Gentle Captain Gave Land He Loved To the People, But They Trampled Beauty Into Decay

His Gift Was Dream —Vandals Ruined It

By PAT DUFOUR
Times Staff

If ghosts could walk, the shade of Capt. E. G. Beaumont would shake with anger as he viewed Discovery Island, the 151-acre park he left to the people of British Columbia.

By the time he died, aged 91, in 1967, Beaumont had shared the beauties of his island off Ten Mile Point with generations of youngsters — boy scouts, sea cadets and countless others. They explored its beaches, roamed through its grassy reaches and were shown the treasures in their host's home.

One of those boys was John Gornall of 2352 Tod.

This week he showed the Times what has happened to the island he's grown to love over the past 13 years.

Apart from two small plaques, one on Beaumont's decaying and mutilated home and the other on the house which was used by his servants, there is nothing else to tell of government attention.

Both inside the outside the Beaumont home the signs of abuse are overwhelming. Garbage is strewn everywhere and squatters with large drinking habits have littered the kitchen with smashed bottles. Bottles remaining intact run the gamut from cherry brandy to scotch, rum and rye.

Personal effects, letters and other belongings are scattered all over the place, probably rummaged from the empty trunks in the attic.

They include a picture of a stately woman, taken in 1896, and a letter of recommendation from a Sir. Joshuah Rowley in which the lord commends Beaumont for the tutoring of his son, prior to his son's entry into Eton.

Broken panes of glass are everywhere.

The servants' quarters have fared better on the outside but, inside, boards have been ripped from the walls and ceilings.

The frame of the Morris Minor Beaumont used to drive around his estate lies twisted and rusting.

Birds of many species have made Discovery their haven over the years.

Near the marshland where generations of mallards and other birds have rested there are now two duck blinds, each reeking with the stench of gunpowder. Empty shells of four different sizes litter the place.

The marshland is dry as a tinder box.

Government officials expressed dismay when informed of the situation by the Times.

"Because it is a relatively new park," deputy minister of parks and recreation Lloyd Brooks said, "we have no real schedule on it yet. There will be one later on in the year. There'll be garbage pickups, we may have to put warning signs up.

"There'll be increased observation by the parks department and people will be charged if they're caught."

Brooks said that more and more of his budget has to be spent on security because of vandalism in the province's parks, which number more than 300.

Among those parks are two more, donated by the man who became known as the King of Discovery Island.

These are the 513-acre marine park at Bedwell Harbor on South Pender Island and a 350-acre park on Fraser Lake, east of Prince George.

Brooks also promised that a wharf will be installed at Discovery and probably some mooring buoys placed in position.

Director of parks Bob Ahrens also promised action:

"We're aware that the foundations of the house are rotting away," he said, "but we should clean up the site."

More fire watches will also be kept.

"We're rather frightened about fire," he said, "we have to protect this valuable piece of property. We've had a near-miss already. Somebody left a camp fire burning on the west bay which overlooks Oak Bay. It crept up the slope but luckily the wind changed."

Ahrens also promised to do something to protect the wildlife on the island:

"People can shoot in provincial parks unless they're specifically closed," he said.

"This one," he added, "should be closed to hunting."

The mallard ducks we saw resting on the pond near the marsh will be grateful.

So will the wild mink who looked us straight in the eye as we made ur way back to our beached boat.

Mace Shrinks Plans to Meet City

The controversial Bay Village development in James Bay has shrunk from its soaring original concept of 269 feet to a modest height of 70 feet, in a revised application submitted to city hall by developer J. A. Mace.

Apparently resigned to the fact he will never be able to push through his original 29-storey highrise proposal, on which he has fought city council for nearly three years, Mace has now presented a different plan with both height and density considerably scaled down.

Unlike his original proposal, which required the signing of a land-use contract with council, the latest submission fulfils all the requirements of the C1 commercial zone under which the three-acre site at Menzies and Simcoe is designated.

As a result, city hall sources indicated Friday, no serious objection is expected to be raised and approval of a building permit will follow fairly automatically once the routine checks have been carried out, including scrutiny by the Advisory Design Panel.

Mace said in an interview Friday the revised proposal conforms exactly to the C1 restrictions of 70-foot height and floor-space-to-land ratio of 1.4 to one.

The design of the L-shaped building has been prepared "in the best possible way we know how, architecturally and aesthetically," he said.

On both vertical and horizontal planes, the architectural treatment is designed to "break up the size" of the building.

Mace said the decision to scale down the size of the development to "prevent any further losses," has meant a substantial loss in equity value to his company.

The building as now envisaged will accommodate only 160 suites, compared to the originally-proposed 250 apartments, and the commercial area has been effectively halved to about 50,000 from 100,000 square feet.

A city planning official said Mace's new scheme proposed a building with a series of "stepped-up" floors giving a terraced effect quite different from the original tower concept.

Although density would be greatly reducel, there would be larger floor areas above ground level than if the developer had been allowed to proceed with his 29-storey highrise.

"This is more of a European-type massing in terms of being fatter and lower rather than higher and thinner," the official said.

Zoning committee chariman Ald. Mike Young hadn't seen the plans Friday, but he said initial reactions from those who had was that the proposal was "not too exciting."

He added, however, that under the circumstances council can hardly expect to get a development proposal embodying more than the zoning calls for.

Fund Shortage to Kill 'Unteachables' Hopes

By LINDA HUGHES
Times Staff

Victoria Teachers' Project is being forced to close its doors.

The school that has given more than 250 of Victoria's "unteachable" children a place to learn and a way to get back into the school system, has run out of funds.

School director Bill Benson said Friday the provincial cabinet has informed him they can not provide any financial support for the project, which has previously been funded through Local Initiative Programs.

Their L.I.P. grant runs out May 31 and no new federal funds have been granted.

The school's 15 workers hope to receive a special one-month L.I.P. extension to complete the school year but after that will be joining the ranks of the unemployed.

"I guess we'll just have to fold completely," Benson says, "unless somebody comes up with some money — but I can't see who will have more than the provincial government.

"They (the cabinet) gave us full praise for our work," Benson said, "I'm surprised they couldn't raise enough funds."

The project, through Education Minister Eileen Dailly, applied to the cabinet for $320,000 to expand their school to 20 teachers next year. For a year and a half the school has been running on L.I.P. grants totalling about $100,000 a year.

"Even if they'd given us one-half or one-third that amount, we could have survived until we got more funds," said Benson.

The project, which works out of Beacon Hill School, now has 12 full-time teachers who work on a one-to-one basis with 60 students needing special assistance with learning problems. They only accept children who have exhausted all regular channels of special education assistance.

"We've had professional people — principals, department of education officials, psychologists — all say our school is necessary and we are performing efficiently," the director said.

"We have an 87 per cent success rate," he said, with already 42 per cent of their pupils back in regular schools and working successfully.

The school follows the education curriculum set down by the department of education and Benson says they have a stringent academic program.

"When we say our students have passed Grade 6, they've passed Grade 6," said Benson, "and I'd be willing to match them with any other school in the province."

"Our students are going to be out on a limb because we take only students who can't go anywhere else."

Benson says his teachers are all excellently qualified, many with masters degrees and special training.

The project will approach Greater Victoria school board for funds but Benson said it is not likely the board will be able to help them.

All the Fire Left Them Was Clothes They Wore

A mother of six children even lost the $15 she had just been paid for house work when fire destroyed the family's house at 2022 Richmond Friday evening.

Mrs. June Akehurst, 40, and her two boys and four girls ranging in age from nine to 20, escaped with just the clothes they wore when an electrical fault in a basement circuit box touched off the blaze.

Forty-nine tropical birds in a front room aviary perished in the fire but the family was able to rescue their dog and cat and pet hampsters.

One of the children is even without shoes today. The family is staying at the Estrella Motel.

A daughter said there was no insurance on the family's property in the rented house.

All the older children lost what money they had in the fire. Mrs. Akehurst's family allowance cheque was also burned.

Both the St. Vincent de Paul Society and the Salvation Army were organizing help for the family today.

A society spokesman said donations could be brought to the store at 560 Johnson. A spokesman for the Salvation Army said money donations could be brought or mailed to the army office at 769 Pandora. Furniture, bedding, clothing and food will be picked up if donors phone 386-3295.

The Richmond Road blaze was the second in rapid succession for city firemen Friday. Earlier in the afternoon they were called to a house at 1032 Balmoral where an electrical fault is also thought to be the cause of a blaze which did heavy damage.

The occupants were away at the time. Most of the contents of the rented house were saved but an estimated $6,000 damage was done to the building.

Saanich firemen were called out shortly before 6 a.m. today to douse a brush fire between Telegraph Bay Road and Tudor on Ten Mile Point.

It took about 2,000 gallons of water to extinguish the quarter-acre blaze which was smouldering deep in tinder-dry moss, a fire department spokesman said. He added he had never seen the bush this dry for the time of year.

NEW CITY MANAGER TO BE NAMED SOON

Announcement of Victoria's new city manager will be made by the end of the month, Mayor Peter Pollen said today.

Pollen refused to confirm reports that city comptroller Jim Bramley, 48, will be appointed to the position, which became vacant last month when former city manager Bill Hooson was fired by council.

He did say, however, that "serious consideration will be given to promotion from within." The position has not been advertised.

Bramley, who joined city hall staff in 1955 as assistant comptroller, has been acting city manager since Hooson left.

What's It To Be . . . Fish or Memories?

IN THE OYSTER RIVER country there once lived a son of the pioneers who remembered being upended and nearly drowned by a horde of spooked salmon. The Oyster no longer harbors fall spawning runs to match the invasion that bowled Walter Woodhouse off his feet during a fisheries count. But on the now-distant night when old-timer Woodhouse told this tale from his youth, salmon were still hosting into his river in numbers that tax belief.

Ascending fish made a constant watery commotion in the riffles. Their sheer mass covered the bottom of each pool and deeper reach with a black carpet. Surely nothing and nobody could threaten this seemingly inexhaustible resource.

The Oyster still produces salmon, cutthroat trout and steelhead in limited numbers. In view of the tribulations this and other Vancouver Island east coast streams have been subjected to, I consider that fact not far from a miracle.

The catalogue of the Oyster's misfortunes begins with the clearcut logging that denuded its watershed, guaranteeing an aftermath of fires, bankside erosion, wild freshets and summer shrinkage that bared its bones.

Diesel cats have lumbered about in its lower reaches, shifting its gravel beds, altering its flow and wiping out pools that were admirable holding grounds for its migrant fish populations.

The suggestion has been made that it be cursed with a reservoir from which water would be piped to augment the Campbell River municipal supply in periods of peak use. In a hot summer, that is to say, when our streams need all the flowage they can muster.

Its all-important estuary, the corridor by which salmon and coastal cutthroat trout enter its waters, has not been spared. As part of an ambitious recreation development, a dredged channel and boat basin have turned its relatively narrow estuary into a freeway for powered craft.

Sport fishermen and conservationists have protested at regional level against plans by the same private developer for a "test channel" which would carve a slot across the tidal flats near the river mouth. What the ecological effect of such a channel would be — or of the major dredging operation planned to follow — is anybody's guess.

The closest approach to an informed statement yet made on the subject was contributed by a provincial fish and wildlife branch biologist who attended a Comox Strathcona regional board hearing this month.

"Everything you do to a stream changes it," he said. "We just have to decide what is an acceptable level of change and what isn't.

"We do know that generally channeling is bad for fish production."

If we know generally that dredging, and indiscriminate logging, and water diversion, and destructively short-sighted fisheries management practices are bad for our streams, I suggest that we should be acting on that knowledge far more effectively than we have so far done.

I have focused on the Oyster because I have been a witness to its decline as a priceless natural resource.

I also think that it and other failing Vancouver Island streams could be restored if federal and provincial governments, acting in their respective spheres, would pay more than lip service to protection and restoration.

To be effective, a restoration program should begin at the north and south approaches to the Strait of Georgia and extend to the fountainhead of the last little feeder creek.

It should call a halt to bankside cutting, replant where necessary, and establish permanent buffer strips.

It should ban any stream-tampering that can't be justified absolutely in terms of the wealth of the waterway concerned.

It should regulate saltwater commercial and sport fishing, not to permit mere minimum escapement of salmon to their spawning beds, but to guarantee as far as is humanly possible that the spawning gravel is occupied to capacity.

Where man-made spawning beds would help restore the runs, these should be constructed. Their effectiveness has been proved on the Big Qualicum and some lesser waters.

No program worth attempting would countenance the reckless inroads into herring supply that in past years have reduced herring-feeding salmon species to near starvation in salt water.

Perhaps I'm unduly optimistic to believe we can continue to have trout and salmon using our Island streams in their seasons indefinitely. Not the fantastic runs that Walter Woodhouse remembered or even the lesser one that I recall, but fish enough to halfway justify our tourist advertising. We won't have them, however, unless those with power to re-build those runs take positive action.

And action, I maintain, is long overdue.

Copter Mercy Missions Rush Two to Hospital

A Canadian Forces helicopter from Comox airlifted a fisherman with a mangled arm and a logger with a crushed chest to hospitals Friday in a series of rescue bids stretching over 18 hours.

One of the victims is in good condition at Nanaimo Hospital today and the other is reported in poor condition at Vancouver General Hospital.

The Rescue Co-odination Centre said the first call came through by citizen band relay shortly before 6 a.m.

Pierre Roberge, 35, of Nanaimo, one of the two-man crew on a fishboat 23 miles south of Ucluelet, caught his arm in the anchor winch. Before it was freed it was badly lacerated and broken in several places.

The Labrador helicopter dispatched to the scene from 424 Rescue Squadron at Comox was unable to lift the pain-wracked man up at sea because of heavy swells, high winds, low cloud and fog.

So a paramedic, Master Cpl. R. J. "Soup" Campbell, dropped into the water and swam to the boat to administer drugs to Roberge. When the boat reached calmer waters close to shore, the Labrador, piloted by Capt. Stu Smith and with co-pilot Capt. John Randle, airlifted Roberge to hospital at Nanaimo.

Later in the day the same helicopter was called to Tahsis where a man whose chest had been crushed by a rolling log was in deteriorating condition.

It was reported the injured man, Dick Van Eyk, 42, of Tahsis, had suffered several broken ribs and a collapsed lung. The only way he could be transported because of the nature of his injury was strapped in a chair.

And because doctors felt the altitude would aggravate the lung injury, the helicopter could not climb high enough for a direct run to Vancouver General across Vancouver Island. The pilot circled the island coast past Victoria in the darkness.

Between the two missions, the Labrador crew had been called out to successfully locate missing boaters near Port Renfrew.

When the Labrador returned to the Comox airbase from Vancouver about 11:30 Friday night, its crew had been on the job close to 18 hours.

One Old Floor—Where Basketball Was King

Sports Flashback of Feet and Fame

It was fairly typical of the country in general. Sirloin steak was selling at 22 cents a pound; men's shirts were 79 cents; the most stylish felt hat could be bought for $1.95, while down at the Chamber of Commerce the best dance in town was only a quarter.

The real estate boom hadn't hit. A new five-room house sold for $2,550; a seven-room house, with bathroom, on a half-acre lot between Douglas and Quadra could be purchased for $950; transportation was cheap — $50 would get you a good set of wheels; and Eddie Cantor was showing in "The Kid from Spain" at the Dominion.

This all came about because of renovations planned for Victoria High School this summer. They're going to rip up the old floor in the old gym in the old home of bastketball in this town, and a few old memories with it.

Blue Ribbons? They were the very first of the city's Canadian senior A men's basketball champions, and represented some famous feet (if you'll pardon the pun) and some famous feats at dear old Vic High.

But no, contrary to popular opinion, the men's national finals never did get to be played at the old stand. Just the exciting preliminaries for years leading to five national men's titles for the city — 1935, the Ribbons again; 1939, Dominoes; 1943 Pat Bay Gremlins; 1946 Dominoes.

Even back in 1933, they moved out to the Willows exhibition building for the final against Windsor. It was front-page news, the victory, four games to one. Joe Ross, Tommy Little, Al McKeown, Chuck Chapman, Art Chapman, Johnny Craig, the Patricks, Lyn and Muzz, will recall that one.

Dominoes? That was the name suggested by Alex McKeachie. The "dom" came from Dominion (champs, that is). The change came when the Blue Ribbon Tea Co. gave up club sponsorship.

Through the years many famous feet hit those boards: Doug Peden, Red Martin, Austin Webster, Ollie Goldsmith, Hank Rowe, Roy Taylor, Stan Jackson, Axel Kinnear, Ritchie Nicol, Bert Davies, Norm Baker, Vic Dale, Junior Fox, Ralph Baxter, Ian McKeachie, Rookie Wright, Johnny Clark, Leon Hall. There were others. Some were Dominoes. Some kept them honest. All were talented. The Dominoes however, won nearly all the time, and only three years ago were voted "team of the century" in B.C. sports.

It was in 1939 when Baker, now a Saanich police officer, made his first appearance. A tow-headed kid out of Nanaimo, son of Cyril, he cut some fancy steps right from the start. He was just 16 when he made his debut. In 1946, he enjoyed one of his finest nights anywhere when he popped in 33 points against Harlem Globetrotters, an almost unheard of feat, as the Dominoes crushed the famed tourists by seven points.

Baker later was elected basketball player of the half-century, before that, the Chapmans and Peden had been on the 1936 Olympic team at Berlin.

Oh, sure, basketball at Vic High was the only game in town in those day, and the thing to do on a Saturday night. Lineups were not uncommon; and as there weren't many seats, most of the fans hung from the balcony.

One of the biggest crowds ever, about 1,400 — jammed into the band-box back in 1936 when the fire marshal wasn't looking and saw Seatttle Demolays pip the Dominoew 49-48. The lineup started to form at 6 p.m. for the 9 p.m. feature.

The competition was keen. Always. In one game they never even reached a decision. Against Seattle Knights of Columbus, the Antoncichs and such, the score was tied 30-30 at regulation time; 32-32 in the first overtime; 38-38, second overtime, and 40-40 when it was declared a tie. It probably was the first and only game of that length ever abandoned.

Even rival coaches were polite. In that game Chuck Chapman, generally regarded as one of the finest guards in Canada, fouled out with four personals. But coach Chuck Durgan of Seattle, recalling a favor earlier in the year when one of his players had been allowed to stay on the floor with four fouls, permitted Chuck to play on.

Oh, there were some classic battles, on the floor and off and some the fans didn't see. When the New York Shamrocks, a raggedy lot of old pros full of old tricks, were here, two of their players had a fight — right on the floor. It was a pip. So was the one they had in the dressing room. Still they beat the Dominoes by six.

Roy Williamson, a University of Washington star, was one of the top players to show here. Some times he played under another name so his University eligibility wouldn't be threatened. Bob Houbregs, later a pro, was another. If the program wasn't always right, the player nobody knew usually was very good indeed.

At playoff time, it was Vancouver—Victoria rivalry at its keenest. Tickets were at a premium. Arnie Bumstead, Pi Campbell, Joe Ross, Wally Masters, Art Willoughby, Jimmy Bardsley, Norm Gloag, Harry Franklin, Bob Pickell, Hunk Hederson, Pat McGeer . . . the list goes on . . .

Of one game the story of the day read:

"Pi Campbell, high-scoring guard of the visitors, was watched so closely he managed but a single point."

Doug Peden was a rugged competitor even in the days before he went off bicycle riding with his brother Torchy. Mild mannered, too. Until one night.

"After a hot first half, they put this All-American football player on me," Doug recalled. "Every time I got the ball, he clobbered me. Finally, I don't know how I did it, but I mean't to, I hit him in such a way he ended up in the second row of the seats. He never came back on the floor."

Fans could get boisterous. One night an Indian club came bouncing across the floor. They were available, and within reach. Dumbbells hung from the wall too. Fortunately the tossed club missed everyone, including the referee. And it wasn't uncommon then for the officials to be wrong either. Often U.S. officials were recruited for crucial playoff games. There was no hint of bias, mind from city regulars Bob Macmurchie and Wally Stipe, and Vancouver's best, Alf Perrin and Ralph Thomas. But with Americans, there wouldn't be any chance of any.

Another night, two of the bench-bound Dominoes decided they weren't seeing enough of the floor and took to the street. They ran down the road to enjoy a beer with the father of some girls they knew who lived nearby.

When they came back, their places on the bench were still open. Whereupon, Red Martin said to George Andrews:

"There, I told you we wouldn't be missed."

Ah, but girls! If they appear to have been ignored, it shouldn't have happened. Because in 1938, for the first time in 14 years Axel Kinnear's Gainers took the B.C. crown at the Vic High gym only to lose later to the famed Edmonton Grads, at Edmonton.

There were Eleanor Leason, Mary Peden, Lucille Spark, Marg Purdy, Vera Edwards, Dolly O'Connor, Viv Hanah, Eleanor Peden on that club.

Then came the ultimate in 1949.

Cec's U Drive, coached by Hank Rowe pulled a major upset by defeating the hitherto undefeated Vacouver Nut House in a best-of-three series for the B.C. title, cruised by Edmonton in the Western final and met Toronto Montgomery Maids for the Dominion title.

You guessed it! Cec's won in three straight, and a romp, 53-24, 61-37, 44-35. That was in the old gym wasn't it — Marion and Flo Kennedy, Kay Trevalyn, Marg LeLacheur, Rita Kaltenbach, Evelyn Stoltz, Mary Casilion (nee Peden)?

And that, you libbers, is the only Canadian title won on that floor In 1952, a new gym was constructed and even the Totems deserted the old.

But let's see now — 1949? Sirloin steak had gone up to 65 cents, broadcloth shirts were $4.25, and the newest style in basketball suits was a chic single piece creation.

When asked to wear it again this week, Marion Andrews (nee Kennedy) who had scored 27 points in one of those playoff games, said: "I will not."

Junior Stars Enjoy Luxury of Choices

TORONTO (CP) — "Money is the big thing," says Andre Savard, but he and many other National Hockey League draftees have other things to consider since being picked Friday by a second big-time league.

The World Hockey Association's first annual draft of over-age juniors left several in the enviable position of being sought by two clubs, with Savard and four others on top of the heap as first-round picks in both drafts.

And while the biggest advantage is the certainty of a fatter contract, the junior stars now have the luxury of other choices as well.

Savard, chosen by Quebec Nordiques Friday and by Boston Bruins Tuesday in the NHL draft at Montreal, says money is the prime consideration but there are at least two others: choice of where he will live, and the risk of being farmed out by the Bruins rather than taking an almost-certain starting spot with Quebec.

"You have to be sure when you play professional hockey they don't send you down to the minors," he said Friday.

In addition, "I've played in Quebec City for four years with Quebec Remparts and I've loved my years down there."

"My agent will talk to both teams. I don't lean either way, but I don't know Boston and I do know Quebec."

The WHA brass consider the near-certainty of a starting spot a big bargaining point, and Montreal lawyer Dave Schatia, who has Savard and many junior hockey clients, agreed. He predicted the WHA would sign up to 20 of its junior picks.

He said Reg Thomas, first-round pick of Los Angeles Sharks, was a "prime suspect" to go to the WHA. It was rumored that Chicago Black Hawks, who picked the flashy London Knights centre in the second NHL round, had offered him a minor-league contract.

Likewise Glenn Goldup of Toronto Marlboros, first pick of WHA champion New England Whalers, and his Toronto teammate Peter Marrin, third choice of Toronto's un-named franchise, are unlikely to go to Montreal Canadiens, their NHL drafter, because they would have a slim chance of breaking into the NHL there, Schatia said.

The 13 teams chose a total of 121 players in the 10 rounds, including 19 from U.S. colleges.

Surprises Pile Up For Island Player

Times News Services

Hockey's drafts continue to give Chemainus-reared Ron Andruff a pleasant surprise, and there was one for Victoria Cougar graduate Terry Ewasiuk on Friday.

A surprise second-round choice of Montreal Canadiens in the National Hockey League draft Tuesday, the 19-year-old Andruff's stock went up again Friday when Winnipeg Jets claimed him in the first round of the World Hockey Association draft.

The early grabs by both pro teams surprised the husky forward who attended Cougars' training camp in 1971 and then was dealt to Flin Flon Bombers.

Andruff counted 20 goals and 32 assists in his first season, then cut loose for 43 goals and 48 assists in the past campaign.

He said he plans "to take a couple of days" to contemplate the opportunities before signing any pro contract.

Ewasiuk was picked in the fourth round of the WHA draft by Chicago Cougars. Cougars' second leading point-getter last season, Ewasiuk's surprise came with the fact he went before Victoria's big gun, Dale Cook.

Cook was grabbed in the sixth round by Quebec Les Nordiques. Cook went in the fourth round to Philadelphia Flyers in the NHL draft while Pittsburgh Penguins took Ewasiuk in the seventh round.

DRIVERS REBEL

ZOLDER, Belgium (AP) — The Belgian Grand Prix appeared likely to be cancelled after four cars crashed on a deteriorating track in the first practice session Friday. No one was injured.

Drivers in the world championship gave the organizers a final overnight chance to repair the Zolder Circuit for Sunday's race, after cancelling the second practice session Friday.

His team-mate in the black UOP-Shadow cars, Jackie Oliver of Britain, said patches of the asphalt surface were being thrown up and endangering drivers following another car closely.

EUROPEAN LEAGUE SET

STOCKHOLM (AP) — The European Professional Hockey League will begin play with at least six teams this fall and hopes to challenge next spring's Stanley Cup winner, one of the organizers of the new league said Friday.

American businessman Joe Besch said the playoff champion of the new league would play teams from the Soviet Union and Czechoslovakia for the right to meet the National Hockey League's Stanley Cup champion.

Besch said his league, which will include two teams each from Sweden and Finland, and one each from England and West Germany, would open its schedule Oct. 6 in London.

In the past, hockey organizations from Eastern Europe have been cool towards the idea of the professional league.

Outfield Collision Benefits Redlegs

When Cincinnati Reds scheduled a Teen-age Night, they expected a crowd in the seats, but they didn't expect the youthful fans to make a difference on the field.

But they did.

With one out in the fifth inning and Pete Rose on first, the Reds' Joe Morgan lofted a routine fly ball to right centre which attracted a crowd of two—right fielder Clarence Gaston and centre fielder John Grubb.

The 28,109 spectators shouted a lot louder than the two San Diego Padres players, who couldn't hear one another and ended up reaching the same spot at the same time.

After the collision, Gaston and Grubb remained on the ground while Morgan circled the bases. Grubb, who had the wind knocked out of him, finally retrieved the ball but Morgan was already in the dugout with an inside-the-park home run.

Cincinnati went on to score a 5-4 victory.

Gaston left the game under his own power but was taken to Christ Hospital with a possible head injury.

Jack Billingham had to survive a three-run San Diego rally in the eighth before registering his seventh victory of the season, tops in the National League.

Elsewhere in the National League, Los Angeles Dodgers overcame Atlanta Braves 3-2, New York Mets edged Pittsburgh Pirates 4-3, Houston Astros defeated San Francisco Giants 3-1 and Chicago Cubs beat Philadelphia Pirates 9-2. The game between St. Louis Cardinals and Montreal Expos was postponed due to rain and cold at Montreal.

In the American League, Minnesota's Jim Kaat served up a six-hit 3-0 shutout as the Twins handed Chicago White Sox their fifth loss in seven games; Milwaukee Brewers tagged relief ace Sparky Lyle for three runs after two were out in the ninth to defeat New York Yankees 6-5; Detroit Tigers clipped Boston Red Sox for the seventh straight time this season, 5-4; Oakland Athletics edged Kansas City Royals 5-4; Baltimore Orioles downed Cleveland Indians 6-2, and Bill Singer won his sixth straight game as California Angels trounced Texas Rangers 6-1.

The Oakland-Kansas City game was marred by the ejection of Bill North. He flung his bat at Kansas City reliever Doug Bird after swinging at an inside pitch in the ninth inning.

Chicago's Glenn Beckert had a close call on a close call in Philadelphia but extended his hitting streak to 26 games as Ferguson Jenkins set back the Phils on six hits.

In the first inning, the Chicago second baseman hit a high chopper to shortstop Larry Bowa who made a good throw.

Beckert was sure he was safe, umpire Augie Donatelli wasn't as certain. The first base umpire started to raise his hand to signal out, then changed his mind.

Beckert went hitless the rest of the night.

Provincial Students Share Grant Offering

OTTAWA (CP) — Health Minister Marc Lalonde announced Friday that 490 student athletes representing 48 sports will receive government grants this year.

The recipients were selected from 3,500 applicants.

All national sports-governing bodies were asked to rank the applicants according to competitive excellence and the applications were reviewed by a national selection committee.

The value of the grants will be based on the level of education. University students will receive $1,800 while those in community colleges or their equivalent will get $1,200 and those in high school $600.

Ontario athletes get 138 of the grants while British Columbia gets 101, Quebec 73, Alberta 42, Nova Scotia 34, Manitoba 29, New Brunswick 24, Saskatchewan 21, Newfoundland 17, Prince Edward Island seven and the Northwest Territories four.

Lalonde said many applications were received from hockey players wishing to continue studies. These were referred to Hockey Canada which will receive more federal aid to enable it to make about 85 grants to be announced in a few weeks.

LEE TREVINO
. . . he's unhappy

Scrambling Pair Unhappy But Quite in Contention

Lee Trevino says, "I should be down the road. Missed the cut. I could have shot a quick-running 80."

But Hill has a solid lead and Trevino still is very much in contention going into today's third round of the $175,000 Danny Thomas-Memphis Golf Classic.

Hill had to do some scrambling but saved his round with a new putter and a new putting grip as he shot a three-under-par 69 in Friday's second round for a 137 total, seven under par on the wind-swept, 7,193-yard Colonial Country Club course.

The controversial Hill, whose unmatched history of success in this event includes three titles in one four-year stretch, held a two-stroke lead over his nearest challenger, non-winning Jerry McGee. McGee was alone in second with a 68 for 139.

The three Canadians in the tournament failed to qualify for the third round. Ben Kern of Toronto had a 74 for a 153 total, John Morgan of Victoria a 76 for 157 and George Knudson of Toronto a 78 for 158.

The cutoff figure was 150.

Trevino, winner of the last two Memphis titles, had a fantastic round. He missed the green on the first seven holes he played, but made par on five of them. He was in the sand, in the woods and almost in the water, but managed to match par 72 for a 143 total, one under par and six back of Hill.

"I escaped with my life," he said. "I should have been down the road. And I did all of it from the middle of the fairway. I just couldn't hit my irons at all."

Esquimalt Gets on Board But Sooke Still Looking

CFB Esquimalt recorded its first victory of the Stuffy McGinnis Men's Softball League season and left Sooke Merchants as the only team still without success in the 10-team circuit.

Catcher Jack White's two-run single with two out provided the difference Friday as Esquimalt edged Sooke 4-2 in the battle of also-rans at Central Park.

Cory Morrison checked Sooke on seven hits and gained additional offensive support from John Smith, with a run-producing single, and shortstop Dave Galloway, with a run-producing triple.

The league heads into a "quiet" weekend with only single games scheduled Sunday and Monday evenings, both at Heywood Avenue Park.

Four other scheduled games this weekend were postponed because of out-of-town tournaments and to avoid conflict with Bate Construction's five-team tournament which got under way at Royal Athletic Park today.

Joining Bates in the two-day tournament are Yakima Oles, Spokane, Renton Foothills and Seattle Regals.

Records Tumble At Seattle Track

RENTON, Wash. (AP) — Longacres Race Track opened its 40th season Friday with a record crowd that pushed a record handle through the pari mutuel windows.

And the first race of the season was won by a woman jockey who now has booted home winners in the only two races she has entered.

Jeanne Stubbs, a 23-year-old mother and exercise girl at her father's stable, rode Jeanne Cake to victory in the first race. Her first win came last October at Yakima Fields.

Because of the unusually large field of 20 horses, the featured Seafair Queen Stakes was run in two divisions.

Sally Little Early Leader

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — Sally Little of South Africa fired a four-under-par 69 Friday and took the first-round lead in the Bluegrass Invitational women's Golf tournament.

The 21-year-old Miss Little, who joined the Ladies' Professional Golf Association tour just in time to earn rookie-of-the-year honors in 1971, had a one-stroke lead in the 54-hole tournament.

Her playing partner, Marbo Sasaki of Japan, and tour veteran Mary Mills, looking for her first victory since 1970, shared second place at 70.

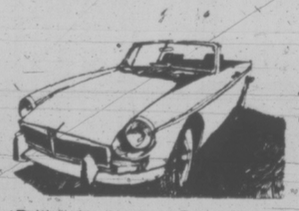
This is the stuff Austin is made of.

Durable—is the only word for British Leyland's Land-Rover and their Austin Marina. Rust-proofing and undercoating are standard procedures for the latest Austin, which also comes with a special 7-point Cold Climate Package that beats the others cold.



British Leyland's Austin Marina has the same 1800 cc. engine as British Leyland's MGB. And they both have front power disc brakes as standard.

British Leyland's Jaguar is a superb example of timeless styling. They designed the Austin Marina along the same lines.

Built into every Austin Marina are the same kinds of economy and dependability that have made the Austin Mini the choice of over 3 million people who have better things to spend their money on than gas and repairs. Another thing that always impresses people in the Austin Mini is its large interior—especially considering its small exterior.

Of course, the new Austin Marina is built that much bigger outside and inside. In fact, the Austin Marina's front and rear seats are wider than most.

Durability. Performance. Styling. Economy. Spaciousness. These qualities, coupled with a low initial price tag are what you look for in a small car today. And these are the qualities Austin has built into Marina. The Marina is not simply the best Austin ever but, quality for quality, feature for feature, very probably the finest car of its type currently being built.

Austin Marina

BRITISH LEYLAND

You'll love it in December like you do today.

The Austin Marina is available in three models: 2-door Deluxe Coupe and 4-door Super Deluxe Sedan (both available with Borg-Warner automatic transmission) and 2-door GT. The Austin Marina is backed by five Canadian parts depots and a coast-to-coast dealer network.

LITTLE LEAGUE ORDER CAUSES STATE DEBATE

LANSING, Mich. (AP) — A state representative has asked the Michigan attorney-general's office for an opinion on whether the National Little League Association can punish a team in Ypsilanti because it has a female player.

Representative Alma Stallworth, a Detroit Democrat, vice-chairman of the House conservation and recreation committee, was critical of the association's decision to exclude and cancel insurance benefits of Ypsilanti Orioles.

She said the decision was made "on the basis of the fact their team includes a female player."

The Ypsilanti team has allowed 12-year-old Carolyn King to play the outfield.

"The questions involve the legality of contracts of insurance signed with parents and players in good faith," Rep. Stallworth said.

She said she plans to introduce legislation that prohibits discrimination against women in competitive sports where teams are utilizing athletic fields or recreational facilities funded by the state.

Ashmore Named B.C. Team Coach

ED ASHMORE
. . . heads B.C. team

Ed Ashmore, a driving force behind amateur wrestling in Victoria, Friday was named coach of a British Columbia junior team which will visit Mexico June 28-July 28.

The 38-year-old S. J. Willis Secondary School teacher coached Canada's team in the 1971 world junior championships at Japan and, in the same year, also directed the province's entries in the Canada Winter Games and at the national championships.

At least two Victoria wrestlers — Clark Davis and Dan MacDonald of S. J. Willis — are considered strong candidates for berths on the 10-member team heading for Mexico.

Final selection of the team will be determined following a trial meet at New Westminster on June 2.

Ashmore, who also coaches at the YMCA, has helped establish S. J. Willis as a power in B.C. secondary school circles. His team has not been beaten in three years of dual meet competition, compiling a 12-0 record.

A.J. Playing It Cool But He's in Hot Spot

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — A. J. Foyt says he's "playing it cool," but he was in a real hot spot going into the third day of qualifying for the May 28 Indianapolis 500.

The three-time Indy winner and five-time national driving champion found himself in the most precarious position of his 16 years of competition at the Indianapolis Motor Speedway.

The hard-driving Texan was in 23rd position on the 33-car starting grid and in danger of being bumped from the lineup here for the first time.

He went home to Houston for a couple of days this week and came back with some remedies for his sick engine. He also went out in his backup Coyote - Foyt and hummed a lap of 194.470 miles an hour Friday.

His four-lap qualifying average in his No. 1 car, another Coyote-Foyt, was 188.927 m.p.h. Twenty-three other drivers made the field along with Foyt last Saturday and six more on Sunday, with a combined average speed of 192.572 m.p.h.

Only Sam Posey, a former road-racer, was slower than Foyt. Posey, who was preparing a new Eagle he bought this week, felt it was inevitable he would be bumped with a 187.921-m.p.h. average.

The three open spots in the starting field were expected to be filled quickly this afternoon, and then the process of bumping was to begin.

The 33 fastest cars will make the starting field for the race, so faster cars can oust the slower cars already in the field, with everybody moving up one notch to fill the bumped drivers' spot.

Theoretically, only the pole, which belongs to Johnny Rutherford, is sacred ground. He won the No. 1 spot on the first day of qualifications last weekend when he charged around the 2½-mile asphalt oval at an average 198.413 m.p.h.

Humphries Acclaimed Life Member

Dennis Humphries was made an honorary life member at the recent annual meeting of the Victoria Figure Skating Club.

He served for many years as the club auditor.

Ernest Fisher was re-elected president during elections of a new executive. Other members receiving posts were Carol Cullimore (vice-president), Geisla Sloat (secretary) and Loretta Goddue (treasurer).

Glamor Missing When Mounties Began

By JAMES McCOOK

Governments treated the North-West Mounted Police Officers and men as if they were dogs. Ronald Atkin, sports editor of the Observer in London, Eng., proves this in what he calls an "unvarnished" account of the first quarter century of the force which celebrates its 100th birthday this year. His research has been diligent, his sources authoritative and his sense of humor in good repair.

The material he found is astonishing. Among the first Mounties enlisted two were blind in one eye, five had serious heart ailments, one had tuberculosis, one had syphilis and one had a fractured leg. The recruiting officers were told to get men who could ride well but, when training started it was painfully clear that several of the officers could not even stay on a horse.

Clothing was inadequate and of poor quality, the issue rifles and revolvers were inefficient and ammunition was unreliable. In the author's words, the famous 1874 march west to the foot of the Rockies was an epic of endurance but "also epic in its lack of organization, in the poor way in which it was conducted and in its incredibly close brush with disaster."

They didn't have waterbottles on that anguished journey, and thirst was added to the innumerable discomforts. Not even dignity was preserved. Some of the 300 young men who joined up expecting to fight Indians and ride in exciting patrols found themselves driving dull ox-teams.

The hungry men learned to eat frogs. Bugler Bagley's mouth was so blistered that he could not sound a note. When September came with chill nights, every officer and man had to give up a blanket to cover the starving horses. When the site of Fort MacLeod had been decided on, in what is now southern Alberta, Assistant Commissioner James MacLeod said that "not a single log of men's quarters shall be laid till the horses are provided for, as well as a few sick men."

The exhausted men in the Jarvis party sent to Edmonton in 1874 had to carry even more exhausted horses on poles to get them through mudholes and swamps.

In cold barracks in 1874-75 monotony set in and there were cases of mutiny and insubordination. Inspector Jacob Carvell had 12 men brought before him after they supported a furious sub-constable who had refused to cook for Indians. Carvell reduced NCOs to the ranks and fined every man 30 days' pay.

Carvell had been an officer in the Confederate Army in the United States and after a spell of duty at Swan River, where the menu was bread and pork three times a day, the meat being almost all fat, "a revolting mixture of shades of yellow and green," Carvell himself deserted. He did not think it could be called that because, being a true Southern gentleman, he mailed his "resignation" from Boulder, Colorado. The 24 who deserted from Fort MacLeod in one month did not bother with such formality. They just left.

Those who remained on duty felt unappreciated. At the Maple Creek barracks it was said that the water was so alkali it made wood rot and ate through kitchen utensils in a few weeks.

There was no provision for recreation but the boys at Swan River, given a holiday for the Queen's birthday on May 24, amused themselves killing the non-poisonous snakes which infested the area — with a "bag" of 1,110!

The police hunted down the whisky-traders who debauched the Indians but, despite the faint hope they'd all be temperance teachers, numbers of officers and men consoled themselves with booze, when they could get their hands on it. One of their songs was,

Pass the tea and let us drink —
To the guardians of our land
You can bet your life it's not our fault
That whisky's contraband.

Out of it all — the muddles, privations, arguments and discontents — comes understanding and respect for what the pioneer police achieved. They were of the stamp of Corporal Hogg, called to deal with a disturbance, who reported a cowboy pointed a gun at him, "against Sections 105 and 109 of the Criminal Code. We struggled. Finally I got him handcuffed behind and put him inside." The corporal also called the doctor to treat the prisoner.

Atkin's impressive work must accept one quibble. A veteran Mountie who looked at the book said indignantly "That's no police horse." The dust-cover shows a Mountie on a horse with a long flowing tail which could touch the ground. Apparently police horses always have had neatly docked tails and the artist's error is comparable to painting a staff sergeant in ringlets.

Two other books of NWMP centennial interest have come to hand, one, "Forty Years in Canada" (Ryerson), a reprint of the memoirs of Samuel B. Steele who joined the police in 1873 and saw service in the van until he went to the Boer War and, eventually, rose to be a major-general. This is a grand account of life in the frontier.

The other is "The Royal North-West Mounted Police. A Corps History" by Capt. E. J. Chambers, first published in 1906 and now part of the Coles Canadian Collection. It is a straightforward account of NWMP beginnings and the advertisements of 1906 repeated here are of interest.

First official uniforms of the North-West Mounted Police

THE BOO-BOOS AND THE FUMBLES

AN UNAUTHORIZED HISTORY OF THE RCMP, by Lorne and Caroline Brown. James Lewis and Samuel. $7.95.

The Mounted Police could not expect it to be roses, roses all the way in their 100th anniversary year. The centennial books, new or reprints, usually hasten to honor the force but this paperback in contrast proclaims on the cover, "The first book that separates fact from myth on the RCMP and its 100-year history."

Through nearly 200 pages the Regina authors — he is a lecturer in political science at the University of Saskatchewan and she is a CBC researcher — parade the fumbles and embarrassments of the Mounted Police, ranging from a desertion rate of "epidemic" proportions in the 1870s down to the recent biting criticism of the force by a former member, Jack Ramsay.

The Browns' assertion that the Mounted Police have been masters both of secrecy and good public relations seems to be challenged by the mass of uncomplimentary material which has been published and is repeated in their book. Fine traditions have not protected the force from either error or front-page treatment of its misadventures, although the Browns insist it has become identified with the national interest to the point where criticism of it is considered by many to be an unpatriotic act.

It may be argued, especially in provinces where the RCMP deal with drivers who exceed 30 m.p.h. speed limits and other undramatic offences, that the romantic image of the force has worn off. The motorist handed a ticket isn't likely to think gratefully about the NWMP handling of Sitting Bull or lone patrols in the Arctic. But the Browns insist the RCMP successors to the NWMP are surrounded by a special aura and, if there were more provincial police forces, "Canada would not have so much police power centralized in one arrogant, secretive and militaristic organization."

Beyond the actual cases in which the police were shown to be at fault, the Browns have assembled a mass of conclusions of their own, unflattering to the force. As early as the 1920s, it is claimed, the RCMP had become a law unto itself "and a menace to political liberty. That menace continues to this day."

Other charges:

"The force did much of the dirty work for the immigration authorities in deporting thousands of immigrants."

"That the RCMP provoked the (Regina) riot of July 1 (1935) has been proven beyond a doubt."

"Harassment of youth in general, hippies in particular, and immigrants, especially U.S. draft-dodgers, has been very much a part of the recent RCMP image."

If the Mounties have escaped their proper share of criticism and judgment, the Browns have worked diligently to adjust the balance.

Stalingrad: Epic Battle Changed the World

By TORCHY ANDERSON

Blood, misery and hate are the core of much human history.

Add the extremes of nobility and depravity and you have outlined the few months in the fall of 1942 encompassing, perhaps, the supreme turning point in modern history — Stalingrad.

ENEMY AT THE GATES: The Battle for Stalingrad, by William Craig. Clarke, Irwin. $13.25.

Stalingrad: it needs no designation as a battle, a siege, a victory or a defeat. It was a turning point — perhaps THE turning point in a world war. It was the triumph of a dictator in Moscow over a dictator in Berlin. Millions of men were involved. men and women, soldiers and civilians, were blown out of existence. It is hard to imagine that any like period of human history encompassed so much bravery and cowardice, so much nobility and depravity.

William Craig, an American historian who dug deep for truth, has produced — for me, at least — a book that is terrible and fascinating.

By unearthing many official communications from both German and Russian sources, by individual interviews with survivors on both sides, Craig has humanized the ponderous wheeling of vast bodies of men and weapons with glimpses of individuals constantly facing death — men in tanks, in trenches, in aircraft, men who were to die and be piled like cordwood in the deep frost of the Volga winter.

Outstanding in the cast of this stupendous drama was Paulus, the general who fought his Sixth Army hundreds of miles over the Russian steppes to grind out the capture of all Stalingrad but a sliver of land on the banks of the Volga. But the Russians held that sliver until reinforcements and winter came to their rescue. Sometimes the reinforcements had to be driven into the line under the guns of dreaded NKVD. When desertion threatened one Russian group the colonel drew his revolver, walked down the parade line and shot every tenth man.

As enemy forces tightened the noose around Paulus, the Germans began referring to their territory as the "kessel." It was, indeed, the cauldron.

Despite growing doubts about Hitler among thinking men of all ranks, Paulus continued his faith in his leader. As the situation at Stalingrad worsened, when a quarter of a million men had to be supplied with food and munitions by air; with the Siberian winter sweeping down to ground planes for days, Paulus saw the only salvation for his army lay in a break through to join Manstein's group to the south. Hitler would have none of it. He wanted the glory of the capture of Stalingrad. Paulus was urged to disobey Hitler and, when it seemed that he had decided to disobey, it was too late.

In spite of his own military judgment, Paulus stuck to his faith in Hitler, who he regarded as a genius. Paulus lived to be reviled as a traitor, to end his days in Russian prisons and, later, in East Germany. The wife he loved doubted Hitler and hated the Nazis. After he began his Russian campaign Paulus never saw his beloved Coca again.

There were weeks and months of street fighting in the centre of Stalingrad. An attack gained or lost a few houses, sometimes even a street. The sustained tension festered in men's souls and led to a personal hatred of humans across a battered street. So close were the opponents that artillery fire often took toll of enemy and friend.

Sniping became a "profession" for experts. Vassili Zaitsev was the top Russian sniper and under him lesser men learned the exacting business. As Vassili became known the Germans brought in a champion sniper from Berlin. After a deadly duel of watching and waiting the Russian killed his man.

Tania, said to have been beautiful, became a student in sniping and a girl friend to her instructor. In love and killing she graduated as an expert and in turn taught other girls the tricks of sniper killing. She ran her own score up to 80 Germans but Vassili stayed well ahead of her. Finally Tania was fearfully wounded when "a fat, clumsy cow" in front of her stepped on a land mine. The "cow" escaped serious injury.

Tania was shipped over the frozen Volga for serious surgery. She seemed to be recovering until news came that Vassili met death in the last days of Stalingrad fighting. After that Tania lost all interest in everything.

Both Germans and Russians get sentimental over Christmas, even though the dates do not coincide. Germans never spent a grimmer Christmas than in 1942. Most of them had by that time given up hope of escaping from the "kessel." On the other side Russians were scattering Italian, Hungarian and Rumanian troops.

The air life managed to bring them half, even quarter rations. Mice chewed insulation on electrical wiring of tanks, putting them out of service. Lice and fleas crawled and hopped on everybody. Cannibalism was not a very close secret. German army police dogs went to the cook pots. Men sorted garbage for something they thought edible.

Germans sentries screamed "The Ivans are here!" and the Ivans came with rifle, grenade and machine-gun. Germans fell from bullets and weakness. Lucky were those who froze to death in sleep.

This book is well organized and indexed. The type is large, the illustrations are excellent. The photograph of General Paulus facing Russian officers to surrender spells out the whole tragedy.

The book never loses the theme of war as a personal trial and tragedy — from army commander to company cook.

The Restless Intellectual

By ROBIN SKELTON

The complexity of Herbert Read, both as man and writer, may be one of the reasons why, until now, so little has been written about him. Poet, art critic, novelist, essayist, educational theorist, scholar, publisher, journalist, anarchist, pacifist, and military hero, his protean qualities require a many-gifted commentator.

HERBERT READ: The Stream and the Source, by George Woodcock. Oxford. $18.85.

At last he has been given a writer equal to the task; George Woodcock is himself an equally many-sided man of letters and therefore able to understand and to explain something of that intellectual restlessness and variety of endeavor which make Read's life and work so difficult to encapsulate.

The Stream and the Source is what Woodcock calls a "pre-biography." Although it summarizes Read's life clearly it does not attempt any detailed explorations. It is also, however, an account of Read's views on art, literature, and society, and a critical examination of his poetry, fiction and drama. It is indeed several books in one, and it is Woodcock's achievement to have so inter-woven the threads of his discourse that at no point does the reader feel that the essential unity of the man and his work has been temporarily forgotten in order to tackle any particular matter with the necessary thoroughness.

Nevertheless the book is a thorough one; none of Read's many and changing views is left unrecorded, and his failures and achievements are chronicled with equal candor. Moreover, the book contrives not only to survey its complex subject lucidly and comprehensively, but also suggests that Read's life and work can be viewed as forming a quite definite pattern.

The pattern Woodcock detects is that of a mandala. The life which began in 1893 in the vale of York ended a few miles away from its beginnings, at Stovegrave, in 1968; the stream returned to its source and the circle was completed. The journeys of that life Woodcock sees in terms both of a series of quests, and in terms of a dialogue between two aspects of Read's character.

He was one of the most cosmopolitan men of our time, and also deeply attached to his native Yorkshire. He was an intensely reticent and private man, and yet also a public figure and active politician; for the greater part of his life, he moved continually between the bustle of metropolitan and international literary and artistic circles and the solitudes of the country, finding each equally stimulating and equally incomplete.

It was this "progress of contraries" in Read which enabled him to develop his profound understanding of both the secret visions of the artist and the social and political movements of his time, and it was his need for the quest that led him to promote the work of such artists as Henry Moore, Ben Nicholson, and Barbara Hepworth, to support and explain Surrealism, to develop his influential view of Education Through Art, and to labor for the causes of pacifism and anarchism.

Perhaps he was not supreme in any one field; his contemporaries included better poets, more profound philosophers, wiser political theorists, and more subtle art critics. There was, however, no other man in his time who affected more areas of our literary and artistic culture more significantly than Herbert Read.

He was at the very centre of the Modern Movement, and, though towards the end of his life he deplored much that his own libertarian philosophies and enthusiastic sympathies had enabled to take place, it is to be hoped that he looked back upon the pattern of his life with some satisfaction. He had spent it "accepting challenges."

No one book could do justice to all the challenges he accepted, as those who care to examine the Herbert Read Archive in the University of Victoria Library will speedily discover, but Gorge Woodcock's brilliantly perceptive study has done more to enable us to understand those challenges and those quests than seems almost possible. No one at all concerned to understand the social and literary movements of the twentieth century can avoid studying Herbert Read; Woodcock on Read is now equally essential reading.

DORIS LESSING . . . gargantuan work

Her Purpose Is to Educate

By PAT BARCLAY

With the publication of The Four-Gated City, Doris Lessing must have breathed a well-earned sigh of relief. The book completes the sequence of five novels which she has written around Martha Quest, a South African who emigrates to Britain and whose life spans the period between the end of World War I and the year 2000. First published in 1969, The Four-Gated City is now available in paperback, all 669 pages of it.

I might as well confess at the outset that I have not read the other four novels in the group. And having started at the wrong end now, there seems no help for it but to continue on backwards into history. This proposition, if Ms. Lessing is correct, is not merely ridiculous, it also typifies the muddleheadedness of Western Civilization in general.

In an "author's note" she informs us The Four-Gated City is "what the Germans call a Bildungsroman. This kind of novel has been out of fashion for some time: which does not mean that there is anything wrong with this kind of novel." Now a Bildungsroman is only partly a story; its other purpose is to educate. And the "central fact" which Ms. Lessing impresses on us in her book is that "the human race cannot learn from experience." Our history has taught us nothing.

The book opens with Martha's arrival in London soon after the Second World War. We view the city and its stratum of inhabitants through the eyes of a young woman anxious to remain open, aware, unclassified, unfettered. Gradually she settles in, but not before she has renewed her acquaintance with fellow immigrant Jack. Jack paints, but his only "serious interest" is in sex. (A brutal father has nearly ruined his life, but he is determined not to waste it in hating him. Hate "is a force . . . like a thousand volts of electricity"; consciously controlled sex is Jack's means of subduing it.) Martha Quest, as her name implies, is looking for something else: "Where do I get the idea that something better is possible? . . . As if I were the only person awake and everyone else is a kind of bad dream, but they couldn't see that they were."

At last she finds both home and job with Mark Coldridge, a beleaguered upper-class intellectual who is attempting to cope with his work, his second novel, his young son, his managing mother, and his mad wife. Together they weather a series of domestic crises and the political witch-hunts of the early fifties, and together they create the idea of the "mythical city" of perfection and light, destroyed by the ambition of an outer, shadow city which coveted its secret. Mark has come to believe that destruction is inevitable, that war is "bound to happen," but Martha persists in her quest.

It is the impending arrival of her mother, the old enemy, which gives her the key. Martha knows she must conquer Pity, an emotion (like Jack's hate) which can destroy: "She must be able, when her mother came, to pity her, to love her, to cherish her, and not be destroyed." So she goes to see Dr. Lamb.

Dr. Lamb is a psychiatrist, which is to say he is a man trained to manipulate distraught persons who "must submit to this or that treatment . . . as a result of force, or pressure, direct or subtle." Throughout society, more and more persons are succumbing to stress, until the point is reached where Lynda, Mark's damaged wife, can appear "normal."

Mrs. Quest's visit is a failure, but with the help of her therapy with Dr. Lamb and protected by Lynda's knowledge of potential dangers, Martha begins the exploration of her own mind. She regains the acute awareness she felt on first arriving in Britain, and she learns that she is not alone. "If she experienced and was asking questions, then others like her were . . .") In short, she learns to develop her powers of extra-sensory perception.

When the World Crisis comes, sometime in the 1970s (Nuelear accident? Nerve gas leak? No one knows for sure), Mark has established a settlement in North Africa and Martha and Lynda, working with ESP groups throughout Britain, have organized escape routes. Finally a letter from Martha, dated around the year 2000, decribes her life as a refugee on a remote island in the North Sea. There a group of mutant children embody man's hope for the future: "They are grown up . . . mentally, emotionally . . . they are beings who include (man's) history in themselves, and who have transcended it."

I hope this capsule summary of a gargantuan work does not sound too much like a description of an elephant as viewed by a mouse. Fortunately, Ms. Lessing is kind enough to blaze a clear trail through the underbrush as she goes along, but of necessity countless intriguing by-ways and side-tracks have been passed over here.

The Four-Gated City is the work of a gallant and versatile writer who believes that if man continues to rely on the development of his intellect alone, there is no hope. His sole grounds for optimism are his emotions (can he control them?) and his sense perceptions (can he expand them?). Man's future, then, depends on his potential for psychic evolution.

BASTION FINDS NEW IDEAS

Children's Theatre

By AUDREY JOHNSON

Peter Mannering, founder of Bastion Theatre and director of its school tours and children's theatre program, has returned from Britain with a pocket full of script material and some interesting observations.

Among his collection is an original script that is a clever adaptation of the children's classic fairy tale, The King of the Golden River.

Youth theatre is active all over Britain, says Mannering, though the approaches vary considerably.

So far as children's theatre is concerned, the educational authorities hire a company to go into the schools and work with students and teachers, using drama not primarily as entertainment but for educational purposes.

Among other things the youngsters learn a great deal about communications media, actually working with videotapes, gaining an understanding of consumer problems, writing scripts and jingles.

At Newcastle-on-Tyne, the Tyneside Theatre has a youth program made free by a substantial subsidy. A touring company goes out to all the schools in the area, but, in addition, groups of children are brought to the theatre, not just to sit in the audience, but to explore the whole theatre, with special attention to backstage and "how things are done."

The Citizens Theatre of Glasgow is about the only neutral territoy in a large slum area infested with gang rivalries and animosities.

"One school won't come to the theatre, for example, if they know that another is to be there," says Mannering.

Total grants from educational authorities permit the theatre to do improvisational work on a variety of themes — "while I was there they were working on Antigone and I watched them improvising for two hours" — and then take rehearsals into the schools.

"The children see the plays in rehearsal phase and later are brought to the theatre to see the finished work, which gives them an exceptional in-depth understanding of how a play is made," Mannering comments.

Guildford's Yvonne Arnaud Theatre has a similar situation to that in Victoria. There is a strictly commercial main stage season with children's theatre having use of the building for afternoons and weekends.

Theatre in education is also the thing at Greenwich where Mannering watched the youth theatre company approaching a project they were going to do at the schools in about two weeks' time.

It was a dramatised time and distance study and they were planning it as though planning a course with a school student as adviser.

"The business of participation — of involving the audience in the proceedings — is considered to have been overdone by many groups," says Mannering. "It gets to the point where the kids are running the show and that's not quite what it's all about."

He feels Victoria has something a bit extra going in that there is a theatre school (Bastion) providing another arm for the school tours and children's theatre operation.

One the subject of children's theatre, there will be one summer outdoor production this year, Mannering confirms.

This will be a musical entitled Pigs in a Poke by Vancouver's Allen Morgan. The music score is by Marek Norman, son of well known Vancouver baritone Karl Norman.

The recent Victoria Schools Drama Festival senior actor award winner, Robert Hollis-ton, will be a major member of the company which will be performing in August in city squares and malls.

Theft Victim's Hand Rejoined

SAO PAULO (AP) — Johannes Christian Hess, a Brazilian accountant whose left hand was rejoined to his wrist after robbers cut it off, underwent another operation this week to combat infection.

Dr. Euclides Marques termed the surgery "normal." He said the infection came from germs the hand picked up as it lay on the ground for half an hour before doctors found it.

Music Festival Stars Perform

Each year for 27 years early summer has brought a special concert featuring young artists who have been outstanding performers at the spring music festival.

This is an event sponsored by the Victoria Business and Professional Women's Club on behalf of its scholarship fund.

The 1973 program is to take place Wednesday at St. Matthias Church Hall at 8 p.m.

Arranged by Mrs. J. Ingram Smith, the concert will include ensemble as well as solo items.

The Victoria Conservatory of Music choir conducted by Gladys Pearcy and the outstanding conservatory trio consisting of Marc Destraub, violin, Roger Scobie, pianist, and Gary Russell, cellist, will provide the ensemble performances.

Roger Scobie will also be heard in solos and Susan de Burgh, a notable soloist, accompanist and ensemble player, will be a featured solo pianist.

Trumpet solos will be given by Juliet Proudman, accompanied by Richard Proudman, and a group of vocal solos by Robin Powell accompanied by Anne Crose.

Rolf Gilstein will be heard in cello solos and Nona Avren, a top performer in the speech arts section of the festival, will also perform.

A coffee party will follow the concert, hosted by club president Mrs. Esther McKenzie.

Tickets will be available at the door.

Blood Trade With Lover Backfires

TURIN, Italy (AP) — A young woman was treated at a hospital after she and her lover traded blood in a "spiritual wedding."

Marcella Casamichela, 20, told doctors she met "Gimmy" — a Sicilian like her — in April.

"Our love is stronger than the one binding brother to sister, mother to son. We wanted to seal it with a blood relation," she said.

She explained the ceremony in which they extracted blood with syringes from their arms, then traded syringes and made the injections.

A Concert Hall Won't Do

Natural curiosity took me to the legislative buildings this week on a quest to find what, if anything, was happening to the civic centre brief presented by Pacific Coast Centre Foundation.

So far the brief — a fairly detailed analysis of the proposal — as well as a feasibility study by a prominent city architect and a follow-up letter, have been engulfed in the quicksand of ministerial offices, leaving no trace.

The feasibility study was presented at the time of the only meeting to date, between the chairman of the PCCF, Allan Purdy, and municipal affairs minister James Lorimer.

Bound copies of the brief were delivered following that interview, to the desks of every cabinet minister, the four Victoria MLAs, the Speaker and leader of the Opposition.

Members of the PCCF then waited patiently, aware of the flood of business that was absorbing the energies of members in session.

Finally a letter was sent tactfully suggesting that simple acknowledgement of the brief would be greatly appreciated.

Silence.

But a rumor percolated through from a lesser official source to the effect that the civic centre was dead.

Not so however, is the word from Lorimer's office this week. According to executive assistant Donald Janzen the government is awaiting word from the city as to its interest and also "details from the foundation as to its proposals."

Maybe it's political naivety on my part but it's difficult not to be amazed when one knows that the civic centre foundation got its start in the mayor's office and its initial encouragement from city hall.

As for details of the proposed centre, they could not, at this stage, be more fully and clearly expressed than in the brief which it seems only Saanich MLA Hugh Curtis has read and understood.

The factor of urgency that has entered the picture since the projected sale of the Royal Theatre became public knowledge has caused a flurry of comment and suggestion, not all of it very practical.

Once purchased by whatever agency, costs of upkeep, management, usage and the fact that it is a union house will all become sharply pertinent factors.

While such a purchase will save a somewhat historic building from the scrap heap and ensure the symphony's retaining its only viable home, the Royal cannot, even with modification, contain half the facilities envisioned for the civic centre.

Obviously a great deal more initial funding is required to build the civic centre than is involved in the highest quoted Royal figure.

But apart from that fact, the question of operating costs is a major one that has to be faced.

Is it better to assume the operating costs of a building of limited usage, or those of a complex of infinitely wider scope offering maximum services to a maximum number of people?

Also there is the matter, not to be overlooked, that while the Royal could be much improved by development of a more commodious foyer and up-dating the abysmal lighting, back-stage and dressing room facilities, it is still an over-age building subject to all the recurring ills and problems of the elderly.

I'm not suggesting that new edifices do not have concealed bogies that can play hob with owners' nerves and pocketbooks.

But it's not inevitable that they do and some of the successful arts centres built in recent years across Canada are evidence of that fact.

Presentation of the brief was preceded by a close study by members of the PCCF of these centres, particularly the Regina Centre for the Performing arts, the Saskatoon and St. John buildings.

Having had the opportunity to review this study, it becomes clear that while the Royal Theatre's role can be little more than that of concert hall, and therefore has no built-in subsidization, a civic centre, by its multi-purpose nature is financially a considerably more promising long-range proposition.

KEYBOARD artist Winifred Scott is a member of the trio that will present a recital of chamber music tonight at Craigdarrock Castle at 8. Cellist Linda Hougland-Daniels and flutist Lanny Pollet will combine with Miss Scott on piano or harpsichard in a program of works by Mozart, Beethoven, Berio and Rameau. This will be the first full-length program undertaken by the trio which participated in Pollet's master's degree recital at UVic earlier this year.

Minister Removed

DACCA, Bangladesh (AP) — The minister of relief and rehabilitation, Mizanur Rahman Chowdhury, has resigned from the cabinet on the request of Prime Minister Sheik Mujibur Rahman. But the reason for his resignation was not given. He has been under fire from the opposition for allegedly inadequate relief measures during natural disasters.

COMING UP IN THE ARTS

Victoria Theatre Guild ends its current season with performances tonight and Monday through Saturday of the play Butterflies Are Free. Curtain time is 8:15.

Young artists are features in the annual scholarship recital sponsored by Victoria Business and Professional Women's Club at St. Matthias Hall. Wednesday at 8 p.m. Tickets available at the door.

Second in the spring series of Victoria Symphony Orchestra pop concerts will feature the conducting of famous sing-along Mitch Miller, Memorial Arena, 8 p.m., Sunday, May 27.

At The Galleries

Now on display at Greater Victoria Art Gallery is a collection of 41 works of art by Canadian artists, the gift of Montreal architect Peter Dobush.

Included are a number of important Quebec and Ontario painters of the last two decades, leading artists of the early years of the century, and some works by British Columbians Maxwell Bates, Alistair Bell and Joe Plaskett. The Chinese art masterpieces remain on view through June 3.

At Open Space, 510 Fort Street, paintings by Don Holyoak of Vancouver are on view and there is also a display of student work from Mount Douglas, Mount View and Reynolds secondary schools to be seen through May 31.

'DON'T MIND WORK, JUST THEIR JOBS'

HAMILTON (CP) — People don't mind working — they just don't like their jobs, says an industrial relations expert John Crispo.

Dr. Crispo, dean of the faculty of management studies at University of Toronto, told graduates of Mohawk College."

"I don't think the work ethic is shot.

"It's the educated man's willingness to engage in dull, monotonous, repetitious and stultifying jobs."

He said society is on a collision course.

"We give young people more and more education and yet, in many respects, less and less demanding work."

He denounced the superficial answers of the problem such as piped-in music, office landscaping and company picnics, and suggested instead "cafeteria-style benefits" (pick your own package), job rotation and having workers select their own hours.

Young people want to work but they don't want to be bossed around, he said.

Concert Master Named by Symphony

Victoria Symphony Orchestra has a new concert master.

Harry Cawood (pronounced kay-wood) comes to the city after a year with the Vancouver Symphony.

The violinist was for several years associate leader of the Bournemouth Symphony Orchestra in England and also associate laeder of the London Mozart Players, a noted chamber orchestra.

Cawood's wife, Mary, is a cellist who has done considerable chamber work with her husband in England. She will also be joining the symphony this fall.

On Wednesday and Thursday of next week, music director Laszlo Gati will be holding open auditions for all instruments.

Those interested in joining the orchestra should phone the symphony office, 385-9771, for appointment.

City Musicians In Palm Springs

Conservatory of Music principal Robin Wood, violinist Murray Adaskin and cellist James Hunter are visiting Victoria's sister city, Palm Springs, this weekend to perform trio concerts Sunday.

The program will consist of works by Beethoven, Haydn, Malcolm, Arnold and Adaskin.

On May 27, the annual year-end student concert will take place at McPherson Playhouse.

In addition to leading students in solo numbers, the conservatory orchestra and Suzuki ensemble will be featured.

Concert time is 2:30 p.m.

'Washed Up' at 40

By HAL McCLURE

JERICHO, Occupied Jordan (AP) — Hollywood, said Leslie Caron, is no longer an equal-opportunity employer when it comes to actresses.

That's why she has sold her Hollywood home to return to her native France.

"I don't thiink Hollywood is an appropriate place for an actress of 40," she said. "I don't think she has many opportunities there. Whereas in France they are highly appreciated.

"In America you have to play freak parts if you're in that age category. In France, you can still play love stories."

Miss Caron turned to watch four Bedouin tribesmen race their horses across the desert sands for the movie QBVII, being filmed on the shores of the Dead Sea.

The movie will be shown on American television next year before its release in theatres.

Miss Caron plays the wife of British actor Anthony Hopkins, the Nazi camp doctor in the best-selling Leon Uris novel. The movie also stars Ben Gazzara, Lee Remick, Sir John Gielgud, Jack Hawkins and Anthony Quayle.

"My part is an interesting role from an actress' point of view," said Miss Caron. "I play a woman ranging in age from 25 to 55. And it's quite amusing to do that."

Life, for the most part, has been amusing for Miss Caron. The gamin look of Gigi is still there, but fine lines are beginning to show around the eyes.

"I've been lucky," she admits. "My husband, Michael Laughlin, is a producer and he organizes things for me." She stars in Laughlin's soon-to-be-released Nicole and two other movies in the planning stage.

"I think Hollywood is really immature in its attitudes toward extreme youth," she said. "Except for men. Men can work until they are 50, 60 or 70. Look at Cary Grant. Women's careers are ridiculously short, except for the stage."

LESLIE CARON
. . . returns to France

European films are more subtle and less violent, she said. "They are still interested in love in Europe. In America, they don't film love stories any more, except for Love Story.

"Even young actresses can't find work. The only young girl who works is Ali MacGraw — and Jane Fonda.

"Hollywood is all geared for men because they are organized in a businesslike fashion and can find themselves parts. They are all producers.

"In France, it's still not such a business enterprise and I don't think women suffer from so much neglect."

Streisand the Nurse

New York Times

NEW YORK - Is there a doctor in the house? No, but there is a nurse, and she's none other than Barbra Streisand. Oh, then she's a singing nurse! No, she hasn't got time for such frivolity; she's far too busy tending her patients and fighting the hospital higher-ups. At least, that's what nurse Streisand will be doing in "With or Without Roller Skates," a comedy-drama which she will star in for Paramount next fall.

"The movie will be adapted from an as-yet-unpublished novel by George Slavin," says Peter Bart, Paramount's vice-president for production. "The story is loosely based on taped interviews Slavin did with an actual New York nurse who worked in war veterans' hospitals for many years."

The producer of "With or Without Roller Skates" will be a newcomer named Marty Erlichman. He's a newcomer, all right, though scarcely a stranger to Miss Streisand, since he has been her manager of the past 13 years. "Barbra and I met the nurse from the book twice, "Ehrlichman said, all but bubbling over with enthusiasm for his new job as producer. "She is a fascinating woman — hilariously funny, and very realistic about her running battle with hospital authorities over what she considers the rights of her patients."

Lew Archer, the unflappable, middle-aged private-eye hero of Ross Macdonald's superb series of novels, is on his way to the screen. Producers David Foster and Lawrence Turman and director Robert Mulligan have acquired Macdonald's 1950 thriller, "The Drowning Pool."

Strictly speaking, "The Drowning Pool" will not mark the movie debut of Lew Archer. Once before, in 1966, he was played on the screen by Paul Newman, but he was called "Harper" then, since Macdonald mysteriously enough — has reserved the rights to the name of Lew Archer. It's anybody's guess what Archer will be called in "The Drowning Pool" or, for that matter, in Filmways' upcoming production of Ross's 1971 best seller, "The Underground Man."

Walter Hill, author of "The Getaway," will pen the script for "The Drowning Pool," and — in addition to the super-sleuth hero—his cast of characters will include assorted adulterers, alcoholics, perverts and juvenile delinquents. Not to mention one mean, iron-fisted matriarch who gets bumped off shortly after refusing to sell a prize piece of property to would-be oil drillers.

Producer Albert S. Ruddy, who did a bloody good job steering "The Godfather" to the screen, has a few more thrills in store for us. Come September, he'll be traveling to Oklahoma, where he'll put "The Longest Yard" before the camera.

What's "The Longest Yard"? "It's a story I wrote, some five years ago," says Ruddy. "Tracy Keenan Wynn has done the script, which centres on a professional football star who is imprisoned for murder. Eventually, he becomes the major figure in a prison football game between the inmates and guards, a game that turns into a blood bath."

Oscar winner Liza Minnelli will be directed by her father, Vincente Minnelli, in "Film of Memory." . . . Gene Hackman will star in the movie of Neil Simon's "The Prisoner of Second Avenue."

Blind Institute 1972 Deficit Tops $1 Million

TORONTO (CP) — A deficit of $1,069,880 for 1972 was reported by the Canadian National Institute for the Blind at its annual meeting.

In the previous year, the CNIB deficit was $729,554.

George C. Thompson, retiring president, told the meeting that last year the agency placed 175 persons in jobs outside the CNIB.

During the year more than 7,000 persons received eye examinations or minor surgery from three CNIB mobile vans operating in Northern Ontario, the Gaspe and Newfoundland.

George H. Beck of Toronto was named president, succeeding Mr. Thompson who served for seven years.

Cruise Costs Go Up With Demand

By AB KENT
Times Staff

More obscure ports of call — along with higher prices — are likely to develop as the ocean cruise industry grows, cruise line representative Tom Brown forecasts.

But on a day-dollar basis, cruising still beats travelling any other way, claims publicist Brown on behalf of Sitmar Cruises of Los Angeles and Monte Carlo.

He was here to plan for the maiden cruise to Victoria of the 25,000-ton luxury vessel, Fairwind, converted two years ago at a cost of $28 million from a former Cunard liner.

Fairwind will arrive at Ogden Point docks May 27 from San Francisco and welcome civic and travel industry guests in a shipboard reception.

The company plans eight cruises from San Francisco to Alaska via Vancouver, Campbell River, Ketchikan, Juneau, Sitka and Victoria starting June 1 through August.

In an interview, Brown said lesser known places — such as the Shetland Islands and the north coast of Norway — will be visited more frequently as cruising is patronized by people with more time and money to spend on holidays.

"Prices are now down to $70 a day on our ships," Brown said. "If you sit down and compute what it would cost to fly, stay in hotels, eat in restaurants and take taxis, you would find the cruise is a much better deal.

"We're a floating resort. You come aboard, unpack and you take your hotel with you. You can eat yourself to death and you can't pay for a bit of that food . . ."

He concedes the cost of building luxury ships and providing first-class service will rise, but there are no price increases this year.

Brown said Sitmar is offering package air-cruise fares enabling B.C. passengers to fly from Vancouver to San Francisco for $20 return in order to join the Alaskan cruise, $25 for the flight to Los Angeles for the winter-time Mexican-Central American cruise.

Canadians may also fly to Miami for $100 return to join the company's Caribbean cruise.

Ex-Steeler Dies

HAZLETON, Pa. (AP) — George Platukis, 58, former National Football League player with Pittsburgh Steelers and Cleveland Browns, was found dead Thursday night in six feet of water about 20 miles west of here. The Columbia County coroner said Platukis died of natural causes, presumably of a heart attack.

Travel Guides in Paperback

By KILDARE DOBBS

Over the past 10 years or so, Pan American World Airways have been acquiring experience in the preparation of travel guides to meet the special needs of jet-liner tourists.

This month, in collaboration with Bantam books, they are launching a series of paperbacks to help summer travellers plan their overseas vacations, under the general title of Pan Am's Total Travel Planners.

The Real Europe and the Mediterranean (Bantam, $2.25) is a 352-page guide to the sights and pleasures of more than 40 countries, including the Balkans and the Soviet Union.

Too wide-ranging to be useful for a fair picture of any one country, The Real Europe could be of real help in deciding where to go and when. It gives brief information on the geography and culture of each nation, detail about local laws, transportation, night life and shopping. The tips on unusual things to do are appealing in theory only. If the book sells they won't be that unusual any more.

General guidebooks of this kind should be used in conjunction with books borrowed from the travel section of the public library on individual countries.

The Real Restaurant Guide to Europe (Bantam, $1.95) promises well, listing more than 200 great restaurants. Like the other volumes in the series it claims to be based on information received as recently as 60 days before publication. But even great restaurants fluctuate in quality, and (to speak for myself) I welcome this list only as a sure guide to the places I want to avoid.

In France, Spain and Italy I rely on the Michelin red guides, since they have proved themselves in my experience to be sound. The Pan Am great restaurants are sure to be crowded with American and Canadian travellers, and although one loves one's fellow countrymen and neighbors, one doesn't go to Europe to meet them again.

Avoid also any restaurant that advertises itself as recommended by Holiday magazine. Food writers are never to be trusted.

Most Canadians will be so impoverished by inflation by the summer that we will be looking for travel experiences that are cheap but good. With prophetic insight, Pam Am provides The Real Economy Guide to Europe (Bantam $1.95) which promises the low-down on low-cost travel. It's a great idea if it works, covering cheap accommodation, food and travel in Austria, Belgium, France, Germany, Britain, Holland, Italy, Portugal, Denmark, Norway, Sweden, Spain and Switzerland.

Having used guides of this kind before, I can only say that they are sometimes surprisingly helpful. Canadian tourists should be aware that they don't have to pay enormous sums to find cheap and clean lodging in London and Paris, for example. It's not only unnecessary to stay at the "best" hotels, it's often a sure way to travel great distances without ever leaving home, so depressingly alike are modern luxury hotels.

Bantam books announced this month that they are adding three further titles to the Pan Am series in June: The Real Mexico and South America, The Real Pacific: Hawaii to Hong Kong, and The Real Caribbean.

I suppose I should stress that the information about each country is exceedingly sparse. About all one learns about the Republic of Ireland from the Real Europe is the address of The Irish Tourist Board. Contact with the board, however, will yield a list of farmhouses and private homes where one may spend a night very cheaply — as little as $3 when I last checked.

And one might argue about some of the value judgments, for example: "Portuguese food is plainer than Spanish." It all depends on what we understand by plain. I'd have thought nothing could be plainer than Spanish food, speaking as a hardened economy traveller.

Millionaire Beach Bums Find Christmas Every Day

By MORT ROSENBLUM

MOOREA, French Polynesia (AP) — Kelley, Muk and Jay, the millionaire beach-bums from California, have just opened their third Bali Hai, and they're already planning two more.

It's almost like working, the hotelmen say.

"I love it," says Don McCallum.

"Every person who gets off that boat is worth at least $10, even day trippers. It's like Christmas every day."

Actually, said Hugh Kelley later, "we're not in this for money—we had to stay in Tahiti some way. . . . Yeah, you can say we're worth more than a million now."

Kelley, McCallum and Jay Carlisle used to listen to Tahitian mandolins together in Newport Beach and work over the great American dream of a South Seas paradise.

One slow season, Kelley left his law practice long enough to sail down. He came back and lasted half a day in the office. Not long afterward, in 1960, all three were in Tahiti looking for work.

"First we were going to plant vanilla," says Jay. "We had to write to find out if it was a bug or a potato. . . . We didn't last long at that."

They scraped up money in 1962 to buy a collapsing little hotel on Moorea, maybe the most beautiful island in the world, and the rest is legend wherever travel snobs meet. The Moorea Bali Hai, and the new ones on the other Tahiti outer islands of Huahine and Raiatea are jammed.

People know the trio in Rio, Mexico City and Bangkok where they show up for vacations with entourages of a dozen Tahitian lovelies, guitar players and drink pourers.

Muk has been known to order 75 drinks before lunch for himself and everyone else within shouting distance.

But, in their remote tropical paradise, the three — all around 40 now—hustle harder than ever before.

Muk shambles bare-chested and barefoot through the dining room smiling at Ohio tourists, but he's up at dawn watering the lawn and it's after 8 p.m. before he gets home.

Kelley sneaks off to ride his motorcycle up Moorea's mind-boggling mountains but more frequently he is conjuring up glass-bottom bungalows and hauling cement.

Jay spends hours in a cluttered back room counting deliveries from their egg ranch, a side project, and worrying about exchange rates.

"When we started we didn't know anything about running a hotel," Kelley said. "We just decided to make it like a place we would like to stay in."

The Moorea hotel, the biggest at 47 rooms, is still run like a giant bachelor pad with guest facilities.

One woman screamed something at Kelley during dinner once and he rose to his feet and announced loudly, "Here she is, ladies and gentlemen, Miss Badmouth. . . ."

When she got worse, he dumped the contents of an ice bucket on her head.

Six Law Students For Summer

VANCOUVER (CP) — City council will hire six law students for summer work with the police force and will pay each $650 per month under a plan suggested last March by Federal Justice Minister Otto Lang.

Meanwhile, Police chief John Fisk in his monthly report said the number of homicides has increased to 12 so far this year from three for the same period of 1972.

He also said the crackdown on vehicles without current licence plates will begin in two or three weeks.

WOMEN'S LIB BLOW STRUCK

PEKING (Reuter)—The Leading Chinese newspaper, People's Daily, struck a blow for women's lib Friday by urging that more women in China be given positions of responsibility.

The newspaper said that "some leading comrades still maintain that young women giggle, middle-aged women procrastinate and are not efficient therefore, it is not worth training them."

This and other negative attitudes towards women are the result of what the newspaper called "departmental egoism."

Equal Pay Rulings Applauded by SWAG

The Victoria Status of Women Action Group Friday applauded recent equal pay rulings in the hospital employment field.

SWAG president Dianne Grimmer said it indicates that arbitrator D. R. Blair and the Hospital Employees Union "showed much initiative and appreciate the concept of equal pay and equal rights for women."

One of the binding decisions awarded 140 practical nurses at Royal Jubilee Hospital the $707 monthly pay of male orderlies, retroactive to the beginning of the year.

Grimmer said wage discrimination between practical nurses and orderlies "has been the classical and long standing example of wage discrimination on the basis of sex."

Hospital Employees Union business manager Ray McCready said the Royal Jubilee and other arbitration cases are the forerunners of additional awards to be handed down covering 35 hospitals.

He said they will be a precedent on which the union hopes to completely eliminate wage discrimination based on sex.

One of the effects of pay parity between practical nurses and orderlies, he said, is that practical nurses in many cases will be earning more money than registered nurses.

Grimmer said this is "an interesting point, in that it means that some registered nurses have been earning less than orderlies who have no formal training whatsoever. Registered nurses have three years of training.

"Now that practical nurses are on a par with orderlies, and therefore sometimes earn more than registered nurses, we can see how serious has been discrimination on the basis of sex in hospitals."

'SHOPLIFTING BLITZ': JUDGE

"This is a one-person shoplifting blitz," Judge William Ostler said after a 26-year-old welfare mother pleaded guilty to shoplifting more than $70 worth of goods from five downtown stores.

Elizabeth D. Potter, 1559 Pembroke, was stopped outside The Bay by security staff as she pushed a baby stroller.

Wrapped in a baby blanket was $20 worth of clothing from The Bay. A search of the stroller turned up another $50 in clothes and kitchen goods stolen from Eatons, Metropolitan Stores, Fields and Woolworths.

"There is something distasteful about using a baby in a theft," said Ostler, remanding a tearful Mrs. Potter to May 31 for pre-sentence report and sentence.

Sobbing, she told the court she had two children, aged 18 months and four years, is separated from her husband and lives on welfare.

"She had $140 on her," said Prosecutor Walter Anderson.

"It was borrowed from my brother," said the woman.

"She owns a car," was Anderson's final comment.

Unions Ask More Wage Protection

Contractors should be required by legislation to show full financial responsibility or be bonded before a payroll is set up, British Columbia building unions have urged the provincial government.

Existing legislation to protect workers' earnings is full of loopholes and in some cases "represents an administrative nightmare for department of labor executives and officers," said the B.C. and Yukon Building and Construction Trades Council.

The comments were contained in a brief presented this week to the government's advisory committee on new labor legislation, expected to be introduced at the fall session.

The council also criticized what it called "double-breasted" contractors who try to sidestep a union contract by forming a parallel company to avoid the contractural relationship.

Legislation should make clear that employers with union agreements, who form parallel companies with basically the same principals and business, should have the organization made co-signed as far as union agreements are concerned, the council said.

Dealing with the Labor Relatins Act, the council urged efforts to speed up certification proceedings and the Labor Relations Board should have to give reasons for decision in questionable cases.

More Job Vacancies

OTTAWA (CP) — There were 66,500 full-time job vacancies in Canada during the first three months of 1973, up 76 per cent from a year earlier, Statistics Canada reported Friday.

In the same period last year, job vacancies totalled 37,800. In the last quarter of 1972, there were 70,200 vacancies, five per cent more than figures for the first quarter of 1973.

Between the last quarter of 1972 and the first three months of this year, the number of vacancies ceased in the Atlantic, Ontario and Pairie regions and increased in the Quebec and Pacific regions. Vacancies rose by 1,700 in B.C.

Why Not Think of SCOTLAND
ONE-STOP DESTINATION?
How easy it is to think of Scotland as a country to be visited for a few days, on the way to or from the rest of Europe or as part of a tour of Britain. Even during the Edinburgh Festival agents tend to book clients there for only two or three days before hurrying them off to the South. And everything else that is Scotland is left behind.
Why not think of Scotland as a tour destination in itself, possibly with the option of a day or two in London at the end of the trip? This would be ideal for clients looking for peace and quiet, wonderful scenery and true hospitality.

HISTORIC BROTHEL: There's nobody home at Dawson City house that was last active brothel in Klondike. Closed down in mid-1950s, the brothel has been declared a national historic site by federal government.

Bawdy House Historic Site

DAWSON CITY (CP) — The federal government has launched a $10 million project to restore this gold rush city to the grandeur it enjoyed 75 years ago — and one of the buildings designated a national historical site is the last of Dawson's big-time bawdy houses.

The government's idea is to rebuild the core of the Klondike capital the way it was when 40,000 miners streamed into the Yukon Valley in the gold rush of 1898 and made Dawson the biggest western city north of San Francisco for three brief years.

And among the 13 buildings scheduled for reconstruction is an inconspicuous little two-storey house crammed with bedrooms identified in government documents as "a typical residence of the period."

But the 750 people who now live here know better. The typical residence is, in fact, a brothel of some fame that was closed down in the mid-1950s. However, the buiding itself does date back to the gold rush era.

"Come to think of it, nobody in Dawson ever called it a cathouse either—but that's what it was," recalled Mayor Mike Comadina, 64, who has lived here for more than 40 years.

"The lady who ran it used to call it a boarding house for young ladies. And she referred to her string of girls as nieces and cousins who happened to be staying with her.

"There are some stories about that place but you couldn't print most of them," the mayor said. "The RCMP closed the place down around 1955 or 1956. It was the last brothel left in Dawson and it was the end of an era."

Bruce Harvey, the man heading up the National Historic Sites branch team rebuilding downtown Dawson City, says simply that "typical residence of the period" is a good enough designation for him.

"We're interested in the house from an architectural and historical point of view, not in what it may or may not have been used for in days gone by," said Mr. Harvey.

"It is a charming house and it does accurately reflect the gold rush type of construction that we're trying to preserve."

The residents of Dawson find themselves in full agreement with Mr. Harvey.

"It's not as if the federal government was going to go into the cathouse business and reopen the place with a string of voluptuous civil service stenos," chuckled one man, who didn't want his name used.

"Actually, I think they ought to rebuild it as a brothel instead of a private residence. After all, the pleasure palaces were an extremely important part of the history of the gold rush."

At the turn of the century, Dawson actually consisted of two separate cities—Dawson proper and Lousetown, across the Yukon River. The two areas were connected by a creaky wooden bridge with planks worn thin by thousands of miners' boots.

Lousetown was a wide-open red light district. In addition, Dawson itself had a downtown red light district—Paradise Alley, where the entertainment was a little more exotic and prices considerably steeper.

When the gold rush faded so did Lousetown and a few of the bigger houses moved across the river to Paradise Alley, where the brothel business was consolidated through amalgamations, mergers and the occasional shooting.

As Dawson itself dwindled in size and importance during the 1920s and the Depression years, the Klondike madames who remained were finding it as tough to turn a dollar as the handful of placer miners still working the creeks feeding the Klondike River.

Then came the Second World War, construction of the Alaska Highway and thousands of soldiers and construction workers. Dawson's brothel business got a temporary reprieve and the rhinestone garter belts were stuffed with folding money once again.

It didn't last long. Shortly after the end of the war, law enforcement officials who had been winking at prostitution for almost 50 years clamped down and cleaned up the town.

Lots of Uranium

CORONADO, Calif. (AP) An ample supply of uranium is available in the United States to operate 1,000 nuclear power breeder reactors for 100,000 years, says a member of the U.S. Atomic Energy Commission.

The great untapped sources mean "we have solved the basic problems involved in furnishing us with virtually unlimited electric energy for mankind for the foreseeable future," said Clarence Larson.

There now are orders for more than 100 new nuclear power plants with another 31 already in operation, the commissioner said.

Let someone like Harry introduce you to Alfred the Great, Thomas Hardy, Lorna Doone, Ben Nevis and a bunch of other friends.

Far from the madding crowd in a village in Dorset, you can walk round the small timbered cottage where Thomas Hardy wrote his name into history. If you mind your head on the low beams you can see it all without getting a bump.

Eighteen days visiting 26 cities, 9 castles, 12 cathedrals and dozens of villages, pubs and cottages like Thomas Hardy's.

And you can do it all for less than $28 a day for land arrangements. That's 3 meals every day, a hotel with bath, sightseeing, a host and eighteen hundred years of British history. The Grand Tour is just one of Air Canada's Friendship holidays, where you leave the hotels, the meals, the arrangements and the driving to us.

If you like the sound of it, follow it up in our new holiday guide.

It's full of Friendship holidays. In Devon and Cornwall, Wales and the Lake District or the Highlands and Lowlands of Scotland. And dozens of other equally exciting vacation values all in one big colourful guide. Free from your travel agent. Or us Air Canada.

He'll take you and talk you through eighteen hundred years of history the length and breadth of Britain in eighteen days. You'll meet poets, playwrights and princes. You'll see kings, castles and cathedrals. You'll marvel at the lochs in Scotland, the Lake District and the locals at every stop you make.

And knowing Harry he'll know the name of the landlord, which beer to order and the measurements of the barmaid.

In fact Harry's equally at home anywhere in Britain. Whether he's introducing you to Alfred the Great in Winchester, Sir Francis Drake in Plymouth, the Black Mountains of South Wales, Edinburgh Castle or the historic colleges of Oxford. Harry knows them all like the palm of his hand and better than any guide book to boot. And while you soak up Britain and stay in handsome hotels from Dorchester to Dunfermline you'll be making friends with your 31 travelling companions. And long after you've tried remembering the name of Thomas Hardy's wife or the height of Ben Nevis you'll remember the friends you made. And of course Harry. (He reckons he's made more than 300 new friends this year too.)

Air Canada's Friendship holidays—18 days for only $488. That's just $27.11 a day! With private bath, all meals, sightseeing, Harry and 31 new friends—it's a ride you can't afford to miss. FRIGID COURSE

EDMONTON (CP) — A course on Arctic flying, believed the first of its type in Canada, will begin next week, Burt Nelson, director of instrument flight training at the Aero Flying Academy, said Friday.

The course is designed to equip pilots to navigate in the Polar area by outlining procedures and hazards of Arctic flying.

The course includes an introduction to astro navigation, the use of magnetic compasses in the Arctic, maps and projections, direction, fixing aids, flight and pre-flight planning, dead reckoning and testing students.

Crime, Grime Run High in Bronx

By DAVID NICHOLSON

NEW YORK (CP) — The police call it Fort Apache, postmen carry cans of spray repellent to ward off roaming packs of stray dogs and the people who live there say they fear walking the streets even in the daytime.

The area is the South Bronx of New York City and it ranks among the most crime-ridden, diseased and economically depressed slums in the United States.

Says a policeman who patrols the South Bronx:

"Anyone walking around here at night is one of three things: a cop, a criminal or a potential victim."

The Bronx, which lies northeast of Manhattan, once was a rolling pastoral area whose face was irrevocably altered by swiftly changing immigration patterns.

After 1900, The Bronx became a refuge for many Jews seeking escape from the crowded lower east side of Manhattan, traditionally the landing point for successive waves of immigrants from Europe.

HEALTH RECORD POOR

But since the Second World War, the South Bronx has absorbed new waves of immigrants—Puerto Ricans and blacks from the U.S. South seeking new economic opportunities. The South Bronx now is two-thirds Puerto Rican and one-third black.

That their search has proven cruelly elusive can be seen from the staggering city statistics on the area.

Of its 400,000 residents, 40 per cent are on welfare and 30 per cent are unemployed. Fifty per cent of the houses are without heat half of the time, 20 per cent have no water.

The infant mortality rate of 28.3 for every 1,000 births is far above the average for all of New York. New tuberculosis cases are more than twice the national average. And although it comprises only a tiny section of the city, it had 25 per cent of all reported cases of malnutrition in New York last year and 16 per cent of the reported cases of venereal disease.

Beyond the economic blight, there is the constant fear posed by an army of 20,000 narcotics addicts who must find fresh money each day to support their habits. And if a resident manages to elude the addicts, he must also dodge the growing number of youth gangs, now estimated to have 10,000 members in the area.

'CITY OF DEATH'

Parts of the South Bronx look like a city which has taken a steady bombing from the air. Crumbled buildings abound, many blocks contain empty lots where there is no sign of life and fires burn unattended.

"The South Bronx is a necropolis—a city of death," said Dr. Harold Wise, founder of the Martin Luther King Health Centre in the district.

A prime worry to many city officials is that the urban sickness shows signs of spreading to other parts of The Bronx. If The Bronx goes under, observers say, there may be little hope for the rest of New York.

Government officials quarrel over who is responsible for the conditions in the South Bronx and what can be done to arrest the blight, if not cure it.

City officials charge the state and federal governments have curtailed the urban renewal programs which they say are needed to bring a measure of health back to the core of the South Bronx. But a state official says: "The problem rests squarely in the administration of New York City and the manner in which it chooses to use state funds."

CHILDREN SUFFER

While government officials trade arguments, addiction rates climb, public health services face increasing burdens and the sense of hopelessness among South Bronx residents grows.

Among the primary victims are the children. For many, the choice is between narcotics, which help close the mind to the surroundings, and the violence of the youth gangs.

Those who do survive the initial challenges of crime and drugs often succumb to the daily privations of life in a tenement.

Health workers say that many people on the streets who appear to be more than 40 are really only in their 20s.

"There's a very rapid deterioration of the body in many people here after the age of 25," said Dr. Wise. "Something happens to your body when you spend the entire winter without heat."

Periodically, a new urban renewal program is announced for the South Bronx but none has yet shown that it can deal with the extent of the urban rot found here.

"You can't do things piecemeal—we need better education, better health, housing maintenance, support services," said Bronx Borough President Robert Abrams.

SAYS SLUMS MUST GO

But others contend it is already too late to save the area.

"You must concede that this Bronx slum and others in Brooklyn and Manhattan are unrepairable," said Robert Moses, who guided New York's development in many of the post-war years. "They are beyond rebuilding, tinkering and restoring.

"They must be levelled."

Others object to this formula. "They think that the ghettoes should be burned, but how can you just burn New York?" asks one black state senator.

To some extent, private capital has become involved in trying to help small businesses and residents in the area finance new construction programs.

Baker Michael Gill, who has become active in the community, said his superiors have supported his work "because they believe that if the South Bronx goes, the entire Bronx will collapse, and if The Bronx collapses the city will collapse."

Congressman Herman Badillo, a Puerto Rican, said: "It's going to take two, three or even more generations to start solving the problems."

start solving the problems.'

THIS is the South Bronx area of New York which ranks among the most crime-ridden, diseased and economically depressed slums in North America. The Bronx, which lies northeast of Manhattan, once was a rolling pastoral area whose face was irrevocably altered by swiftly changing immigration patterns.

Freeway Leaper Critical

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — A 36-year-old woman was in critical condition today after she jumped over a freeway overpass, hit the windshield of a car traveling at 70 miles an hour, flew over the car and landed on the pavement.

Police said the woman, Luzviminda Encarnacion, was carrying a purse containing $4,800 in savings bonds, checks and cash when she dropped 45 feet onto the Long Beach Freeway Friday.

The driver of the car, Michael Kohut, was able to bring his car to a halt after the woman hit the auto and flew over the top, landing in the fast lane.

Ron With studies plant's details

By NICOLE STRICKLAND

Elizabeth Stephen and Ron With are Victoria artists commissioned to an enormous task — that of drawing, in perfect scale and life size, a member of every flowering plant in the province.

10 Years Work

It is a task estimated to take the two artists 10 years, working eight hours a day, five days a week.

"There are approximately 3,000 flowering plants native to B.C.," explains Dr. Adam Szczawinski, curator of botany in Victoria's Provincial Museum. "The Museum's botanical division is presently working on a complete illustrated record of all B.C.'s flora, giving general information about each plant, the plant's habit and distribution, and scientific and common names.

"There's been a great need for such a volume for many years, but up to recently, there wasn't the financial support or the trained, talented illustrators on staff or the botanical knowledge of the province." Trained taxonomists whose job it is to classify and identify plants are still collecting flora.

"A book like this is useful to laymen and scientists for an appreciation of ecological reserves, to the B.C. Forest Service, the wildlife branch, universities, geo-botanists, and others. These people and botanists from other countries interested in our Pacific Rim flora are always trying to hurry us up — but it's a work that won't be hurried."

Szczawinski says that illustration of the book poses a major problem. Each illustrator can draw only about 150 plates a year, and at this point only 20 per cent of the illustration has been done, with a long way still to go.

Talent and Care

"Each illustrator has to be a trained person, very careful and very talented, and able to pick out minute details. Photography is an inadequate substitute for a scientific drawing," says Szczawinski, "because the drawings show microscopic cross-sections that could not be shown on film."

There is the problem of losing uniformity through adding more illustrators to the work, so the work continues with two illustrators, slowly and steadily, day by day.

The project was conceived 15 years ago, but proper illustration did not begin until three years ago, when Ron With joined the staff. Elizabeth Stephen recently followed.

Government Funds

The work is funded by the provincial government and national museum, and when completed will cover not only native plants but also those that have established themselves in the province, including even common weeds such as dandelions.

"In the meantime, until the volume is completed," said Szczawinski, "we are publishing the parts in the form of handbooks." Already there are handbooks on seaweed, mosses, heathers, ferns, and orchids of the province, each a milestone for the illustrators and authors of the text.

Artist Stephen says the fascination with the work is endless, because we're involved in another world — a microscopic world that the ordinary person doesn't see.

"Parts of the plant are boiled (to restore them from their dried form), and then dissected before we draw them. We constantly look under the microscope to record distinctions invisible to the naked eye. It's magnificent that anything so minute could be so perfect.

"We're so absorbed in what we're doing that the days just slip by. It's a lonely, time-consuming job, but we never get bored. There's an endless variety to what we draw."

Herbarium Waits

And a few steps from the illustrating studio where Elizabeth and Ron work, the giant herbarium — or plant library — waits with its thousands of plants stored in metal, fireproof cases. All are pressed, dried, and fully labelled, needing only the artistry of illustration to bring them back to life.

Open Classes No Better

VANCOUVER (CP) — Open classrooms may be more stimulating than traditional classrooms, but they do not stimulate better grades, says David Otto, researcher at the University of Alberta in Edmonton, said Wednesday.

Otto told a meeting of the Association for International Research Wednesday the finding resulted from a study of specially designed classrooms conducted by the university.

He said the special open classroom represented the "antithesis of the essentialist philosophy of education."

The room, designed to "rekindle the learners's sensory awareness," had lage abstract prints on the walls, a thickly carpeted floor, movable wall panels, colorful incandescent lights, and brightly colored, triangular boxes which served as tables, he said.

The students, and teacher, sat on the floor.

Two secions of an English course — one in the experimental room, and one in a conventional classroom — were given identical term papers and final examination.

No significant differences were found in grades earned by the students in the two groups, Otto said.

In the team's research paper, however, the course instructor, Peter Horowitz reported that participation, disagreement with the instructor, and openness to criticism by peers was more in evidence in the experimental class than the controlled one.

Otto said open classrooms could serve to "overcome the feeling of isolation," that many students complain of on today's campuses.

He said his study sidestepped matters of comparative attendance and student drop-outs and said studies were conducted by the university of Calgary found that in 1971-72 the university's 9,173 fulltime students generated 7,990 full-time jobs in that Alberta city.

Institutional researcher at the university, Bernard Sheehan, sad the jobs not only included teachers, but restaurateurs, car dealers and drug store clerks, whose jobs serve the student population.

Sheehan said the study was undertaken because the university wanted to kow what impact it was having on the city.

He said while the government invested $51 million in the university, the university in turn generated $71 million in local income.

THE PUNISHMENT FITS THE CRIME

BUFFALO, N.Y. (UPIN)—A youth, who pleaded guilty to turning in false fire alarms, has been given a unique punishment.

Justice Robert Kiener ordered that a dispatch radio be installed for two weeks in the home of the 17-year-old high school senior and that he respond to every Winchester Fire District call, no matter what hour of the day or night.

The youth, not identified because of his age, must wait at the station until all the apparatus returns.

"Then you can return home and go to sleep, with one foot on the floor, waiting for the next call, the same as these firemen you called out," Kiener said.

He ordered the youth to give the court a list of all the calls he answered at the end of the two-week period.

MORALS BURY LEGAL RIGHTS

TORONTO (CP) — Malcolm Kronby, a Toronto lawyer and author of two books on divorce proceedings, says people who try to take advantage of do-it-yourself kits often let their morals overpower legal rights.

Kronby, an executive member of the family law section of the Canadian Bar Association, told a public meeting here that "people who use these kits may be giving up rights to which they are completely entitled."

"It may be, for example, that a woman who says 'I left him,' thinks that she can't get any money from him as a result."

But in fact, he said, the woman may still have every right to money.

Another moral judgment which women make is the case of the woman who commits adultery and therefore thinks she is not entitled to custody of the children.

"She feels that, so she doesn't ask about it," Kronby said.

The author of Divorce Practice, a standard reference book for lawyers, and a new book, Family Law, also said children should be given more say in divorce actions.

"At the present time there are no safeguards for children in court proceedings," Kronby said.

"A custody case can go on without the children being involved and, in a lot of cases, this is felt to be a scandal."

He said in the United States children have certain rights in divorce proceedings and speculated that Canada will soon adopt similar policies.

"The present situation is scandalously inadequate," he added.

"Most real custody fights, real tough ones, involve younger children where parents argue over them almost as if they were pieces of property."

With DOROTHY FRASER

Come and join in the Victorian Days fun! . . .

This is the week for everyone to come downtown and join in the Victorian Days fun . . . So many exciting things are happening in the area . . . with the Broad St. Mall . . . (to which they're putting the finishing touches as we write this) . . . a sort of hub . . . There'll be parades to be watched and bands to be listened to . . . Artists at work . . . street dancing and goodness knows what-all . . . something to titilate everyone from babes to nonogenarians! . . . All the stores are getting into the Victorian Days swing too . . . many of them with their staffs in old fashioned costumes . . . showing all sorts of special displays . . . Naturally, Standard Furniture will be right in there pitching as usual . . . with exciting antique furniture and china in their windows . . . including a beautiful silver kettle which, in itself, is well worthwhile going downtown to see! . . . Lots of excitement inside the store, too! . . . Tremendous displays throughout . . . with staff in old-time costumes . . . dispensing the old-time service, which you always get at Standard, every day of the year, and not just during this special week when everybody is putting his best foot forward! . . . But there will be special low prices on furniture to help celebrate the Victorian Days festival . . . So if you really want to join in the fun and gaiety . . . get dressed up and come downtown . . . especially to Standard where the prices are low, and the Victorian Days spirit rife! . . . Standard Furniture Co., 737 Yates St., 382-5111.

Jewellery to complete your spring ensemble . . .

You really must see the new jewellery that Wilson's got in last week . . . It's so perfectly adapted to the sort of good clothes that Wilson's sell . . . adds piquancy and drama to the classics . . . puts the finishing touches to any ensemble . . . All the new style trends in jewellery are exemplified here . . . "gold" and "silver" neck chains . . . chunky contemporary pendants hanging from single or many stranded chains . . . There's one in gold metal and white enamel which looks like something out of the Egyptian section of a museum . . . Others in gold and white . . . any every one of them perfect for wear with spring and summer clothes . . . Lots of matching earrings . . . bracelets . . . And daintier, smaller-scaled jewellery for the smaller woman who's overpowered with large pieces . . . As for pins . . . we love the cheeky tiger in black and gold with gleaming green eyes! . . . He looks terrific on the lapel of a pantsuit! . . . There's a lovely enamel-and-jewelled macaw too . . . with coral eyes and gold, green and blue feathers . . . And a magnificent peacock . . . which has always been such a favorite with Wilson customers that the order is constantly being repeated! . . . W & J Wilson Limited, 1221 Government St., 383-7177.

Casual shoes noted for fit and comfort . . .

Coach & Four is the name of a very good line of casual shoes made in Canada by Murray-Selby . . . and carried by Munday's . . . When showing us the new spring patterns this week Mr. Munday stressed the good fit, good grade of leather, and high quality of workmanship in these smart looking shoes . . . For the woman who wants a really well-fitting pump with a high gored front and low heel, "Milan" is a natral . . . Comes in white, beige, navy and brown . . . "Serena" is a tie shoe with a low heel which comes either with a leather sole, in navy, beige or brown grained calf . . . or with a crepe sole and heel in black patent and red calf . . . In both cases the leather is very soft, and it's the perfect shoe for people who are on their feet a lot. . . . "Encore" is another tie shoe of punched leather with mesh backing and soft calf . . . Camel and white combined, for a smart spectator look . . . "Poncho", in light brown or black calf, has a high gored vamp and thick crepe sole . . . this is an excellently fitting shoe, and is becoming a big seller . . . "Sancho", with mid-heel and spectator punched leather vamp, is a little dressier . . . White, bone and navy . . . $26 and $28 is the price of these Coach & Four shoes at . . . Munday's, 1203 Douglas St., 383-2211.

Shoes and opaque stockings in the same shade as your dress give a slimming and elongated look.

Contemporary stitchery at its finest . . .

Ever since we heard Elizabeth Mayne speak to the University Women's Club on contemporary stitchery some time ago . . . we've been dying to see her work . . . Well, at last we did . . . at the Handloom which . . . from May 30 through June 1 . . . will feature an Elizabeth Mayne Stitchery Show . . . What's "stitchery" you ask? Well, it's real art form . . . and Elizabeth Mayne is a real artist! . . . Her wall hangings are mostly non-representational . . . although in many cases you can discern the subjects which may be landscapes, trees and the like . . . They're beautiful things . . . done on various fabrics ranging from tweed to bark cloth . . . stretched on wooden frames . . . The actual stitchery is done with yarns and silks . . . raw wool and appliques of tweed, suede velour . . . wooden beads and even sequins . . . and a pottery fish in the case of the stitchery entitled "Stone Fish" . . . There's an inter-play of textures and colors which is simply fascinating . . . and some of the stitcheries have a distinct three-dimentional effect . . . Don't miss seeing this showing . . . And of course these delightful wall hangings are all for sale . . . ranging in price from $8 to around $85 . . . Spotted some gorgeous salvers by Arla Foytenyi . . . Stainless steel painted with acrylic in raised designs . . . very European-looking and unusual! . . . The Handloom, 625 Trounce Alley, 384-1011 and Empress Hotel, 384-1518.

We saw some stunning dresses at Charmante's this week . . . by the famous Mr. Gilbert, a designer who first made a name for himself in Montreal and is now established in West Vancouver . . . They're exclusive to Charmante's in Victoria . . . and there are no exact duplicates . . . A lovely shirtdress in navy and white printed raw silk has the very fashionable drawstring waist . . . Another is an attractive brown-black-white print . . . There's a soft nylon jersey with a tie neck . . . a deep V-necked caftan in pinks and mauves with purple trim . . . A long dress with white and navy stripes set in diagonally to form a V in front . . . a striking and very slenderizing gown! . . . Unusual color combinations and artful running of patterns make Mr. Gilbert dresses outstanding . . . So if you'd like something different, visit Charmante's . . . Other newcomers to Charmante's are The Roadrunner dresses by Novis Denne of Arizona . . . You've probably seen pictures of them in Vogue . . . Cotton and polyester shirtdresses . . . in several different styles . . . for casual summer wear . . . We especially like the navy dress with red, white and blue striped belt and big red and white anchors appliqued on the patch pocket . . . Regional Ward For Births Seen as Safer

WINNIPEG (CP) — A trend toward regionalizing obsteric services in Canada could culminate in the phasing out in the next decade of such services in hospitals performing fewer than 500 deliveries a year.

Dr. T. M. Roulston, president of the Society of Obstertricians and Gynaecologists of Canada, said in an interview Thursday a regionalization plan is at present being discussed by federal and provincial health departments.

The mortality rate of babies during the perinatal period — from the time birth is imminent until about 28 days after birth — stands at about 20 per thousand in Canada.

Regionalization of obstetrical services can reduce this figure by providing specialized services for the 10 per cent of pregnancies in which there is high risk of death or mental retardation, Roulston said.

He said the prime concern was that of quality of life, but that in money terms it costs $250,000 for a lifetime of custodial care for mentally retarded persons.

"A small rural hospital doing 30 deliveries a month might find it damned hard to deal with the arrival of premature twins — and that's what we're getting at," he said.

Roulston is professor and head of the department of obstertrics and gynaecology at the University of Manitoba medical school.

Rabbit, Rarebit—YOU Decide

By MARY MOORE

"What happened to good old Welsh Rabbit?" "You mean Rarebit." "I mean Rabbit!"

At my peril I interrupted this dialogue between two of my relatives by offering to make Rarebit on the spot. (If rabid rabbit fans wanted to taste it she could.) It turned out that I made two versions — one with some beer that Herbie had left here two years ago; and the other with milk.

WELSH RAREBIT NO. 1
(With Beer; serves 6)

1 lb. mild Cheddar cheese (do not use old Cheddar cheese)
1 tbsp. butter
1 c. beer
1 large egg beaten
1 tsp. Worcestershire sauce
1 tsp. salt
¼ tsp. dry mustard
Bacon (optional — see below)

Shred cheese. I had 6 cups not packed.

In top of double boiler melt butter and add beer and when it is warm stir in cheese with a fork until melted. Stir in beaten egg and seasonings until blended. Serve on toast points and if you are not mad at your butcher garnish top with chopped crisp cooked bacon bits or curls.

WELSH RAREBIT NO. 2
(With Milk—Thinner and Milder; serves 3 or 4)

1 tbsp. butter
1-3 tsp. salt.
¼ tsp. dry mustard
1 tsp. Worcesterchire sauce
½ c. milk or cream
1 beaten egg yolk

In double boiler melt butter and stir in cheese to melt. Add seasonings. Slowly stir in milk until blended and hot then add beaten egg yolk and beat with rotary beater until a little thicker. Use egg white for some other purpose.)

Serve on toast points garnished with parsley and strew top with crisp bits of bacon if desired.

The Park Branch of British Columbia's department of recreation and conservation has published a most interesting 36-page booklet! It suggests dozens of activities that will increase your appreciation and enjoyment of nature.

Things To Do Outdoors proposes careful observation of the many fascinating creatures and things one normally passes by.

For instance, on a warm day, you might follow an ordinary ant for at least ten minutes. Find out if all ants look alike. Pick up an ant, see what it does and smell it. (Some emit a smelly acid to defend themselves). And just like humans, ants have jobs. What does your ant do? Is it out hunting, bringing home food or baby-sitting? Also watch what happens when you disturb (not destroy) an ant nest.

You can find similar enlightenment by looking at rocks and trying to discover their history. Or, learn how to figure out how far away a thunderstorm is. Lightning is visible the moment it occurs, but it takes five seconds for thunder to travel one mile. This means that for each five seconds between light and sound, the storm is one mile away.

The booklet also explains how to rear a caterpillar, how to attract and identify moths, how to collect and preserve leaves and many, many other ways of exploring nature.

Career Equals Must Cut Ties

EDMONTON (CP) — Sexual equality in the business world is a Utopian idea and if women want it they will have to face some loss of privileges, Gordon Hayward, Imperial Oil personnel manager says.

Most men enter jobs with a long-term view but women usually must choose not to be bound by a family if they have the same approach, he said.

Hayward added that it can be extremely demanding for a woman to combine the roles of wife, mother and a career, but sees a future for this in daycare centres and kindergartens.

He said women cannot expect to rise to the top through sheer tokenism but must improve themselves.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22—Dec. 21): Emphasis is on movement, short journey, special visit from close neighbor or relative. Home could become base of activity, operations. Cancer, Capricorn persons play prominent roles. Ideas flow and are tested.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22—Jan. 19): You may be tempted to spend in "wrong" directions. Key is to know what it is you want and to go after it. This would be more constructive than scattering your forces. Social contact will be meaningful.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20—Feb. 18): Cycle is indicative of new starts, added independence. Check fine points, details. Read between the lines and be aware of fine print. Your judgment is on target so do what you feel should be done.

PISCES (Feb. 19—March 20): Look behind the scenes for valid information. Be analytical. Puzzle pieces can be put together if you so desire. One who has not been entirely truthful might confess. Don't cast first stone.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are unique, one of a kind, separated from authority early in sense that you decided what you would be and how you would be it. You could have been psychologically estranged from family or you could have lost one of your parents at relatively early age. June should be your most significant month of 1973. You are dynamic, versatile and a natural leader.

Scholarly Approach Disrupts Planning

EDMONTON (CP) — People have to stop being complacent and scholarly about family planning if it is going to be effective, Dr. Marion Powell, head of the population unit of the School of Hygiene at the University of Toronto told a conference here Thursday.

"We have to stop arguing about the legal age of consent, the safety of the pill, about abortion which whether we like it or not is here to stay," and make family planning information and facilities available to everybody, she said.

This is important for the poor who have less access to facilities, can't pay the cost of prescriptions and have the welfare system working against them if they are not openly living with a man.

Powell added there still is discrimination against people wanting no children.

She said studies have shown that the poor want smaller families than higher economic classes and have more children than they want.

The poor have less access to family planning information, are less able to find facilities, and ignorance plays a large part.

"It has been proven that when family planning is available the poor will use it, but the punitive aspects of the welfare system make family planning unavailable to women who are not openly living with a man."

Powell said the cost of prescription contraceptives also penalize the poor, particularly those on welfare.

Dr. Ross Vant, a family planning consultant said advice and counselling are needed. Every child should be wanted, nourished, loved and brought up to be responsible, he said.

Many family planning clinics have a middle-class bias on locations and hours, Dr. Bert Marcuse of the University of Calgary social welfare and psychiatry departments said after pointing out why contraception is rejected — myths, supersititions, fears, need for affirmation of virility, and feelings that contraceptives are unnatural and spoil "true love."

Father William Kelly, of the Lethbridge Separate School System said the Roman Catholic Church regards individual conscience as the final decision factor in family planning although the Pope's stand on on-artificial birth control is the ultimate ideal.

Student Terri Jackson of the University of Alberta, said age restrictions and parental consent are obstacles to planning.

Ignorance and reluctance to discuss sexuality and family planning are obstacles on Indian reserves, Olive Whitequill, a welfare administrator and Brian Yellow Horn, a social worker, told the conference.

Soybean Fairest Vegetable

BY WILLIAM RICE
The Washington Post

"Mirror, mirror on the wall . . . "The fairest vegetable of all? The soybean!

Beauty contest judges and casual shoppers would be appalled at such a selection. "Ugly." "Tasteless." "What do you do with it?" Nutrition- and cost-conscious cooks would be far more understanding. So would the processed food industry.

The soybean's dull yellow surface covers a treasure of protein, more than any other vegetable, and substantial amounts of calcium, iron, other minerals and vitamins B and E. Also, the soybean has more changes of clothes than any beauty queen.

Consider the following guises in which it is presented: Tofu (used in oriental cooking as bean curd), green (fresh) soybeans (prepared as fresh limas, or eaten blanched or raw when very young), dried soybeans (eaten as peanuts or used as other dried beans in cooked dishes), soybean flour (can be mixed with other flours but lacks gluten and can therefore replace only 15 per cent or so of wheat flour in recipes), soy sauce (essential in oriental cooking and mistakenly used in the manner of ketchup by many "eating Chinese"), tamari (pure soy — preferred by vegetarians), miso (fermented soybean paste), soybean milk (liquid or powdered), soybean grits and flakes, lecithin (supplement to control cholesterol build-up) and some others.

Soybeans have long been available in health food stores, although the largest chain supermarkets here do not carry the dried beans. Of the varieties of dried beans, which cost about 25 cents a pound, the best are said to be bansei. Canned soybeans have the advantage of being faster to prepare (you needn't soak them), but cost more and have fewer beans for the same weight.

Mounting beef costs have led wholesale and retail firms to begin to use "texturized vegetable protein" as an "extender" in ground beef products. Thus far, sales have been concentrated in the midwest. Soybean extender has been used for several years in hamburgers sold by some fast food chains and schools.

It is no more difficult to prepare soybeans at home than other dried legumes. However, imaginative seasoning is needed to offset their lack of taste and other ingredients are needed to provide eye appeal. For some, soybeans are hard to digest. That remains a problem.

Soybeans ready for packing

There are several methods of preparing dried soybeans. Even when soaked overnight, they take a long time to cook (3 hours or more on stove top) and absorb more water than most other dried legumes. For four persons, allow 1 cup dried beans. Pick over the beans, soak them in cold water several hours or overnight. Simmer in soaking liquid plus extra water as needed to keep them nearly covered, and salt as desired. Alternatively, they may be tightly covered and baked in a 325-degree oven for two hours.

SOYBEANS AND MUSHROOMS
(Serves 4)

½ medium onion, chopped fine
1 clove garlic, minced
2 tablespoons butter
½ pound mushrooms, thinly sliced
Salt and freshly ground pepper
1 tablespoon tamari or soy sauce
1 tablespoon dark molasses
2 cups cooked soybeans
1 tbsp. chopped fresh dill or 1 teaspoon dill weed

Melt butter in a skillet. When it bubbles, add onion and garlic and cook until soft. Add mushrooms. Season with salt and pepper and cook over low heat; turning occasionally, until mushrooms have softened.

Add a bit more butter if pan becomes dry.

At the same time, combine tamari and molasses in a saucepan. When well blended, mix in soybeans. Cover and cook to heat through, about 10 minutes.

Combine soybean mixture with mushrooms and sprinkle on dill. If used as a main course, serve with buttered noodles or macaroni.

BAKED SOYBEANS
(Serves 8)

1 pound yellow soybeans, picked over and washed
¼ cup oil or bacon drippings
1 onion, chopped
1 green pepper, seeded and diced
½ cup celery, chopped
1 clove garlic, minced
2 tablespoons brown sugar
2 tablespoons molasses
1½ teaspoons salt
⅛ teaspoon black pepper
1-3 cup sweet pickle relish
1 teaspoon vinegar
1 teaspoon prepared mustard (dijon or spicy preferred)
¾ cup tomato ketchup
2 tablespoons chopped parsley

Place beans in a large freezer container, or several smaller ones, and cover beans with cold water. There should be plenty of room for the beans to expand.

Let soak five hours and then place in the freezer for at least 24 hours. (This reduces length of cooking time required.)

Place frozen beans and liquid in a large kettle. Bring to a boil and simmer gently until tender, adding more hot water if necessary. This takes 2½ to 3½ hours.

Meanwhile, heat the oil and saute the onion and green pepper until tender. Transfer to a 3-quart casserole. Add remaining ingredients. Combine well.

Preheat oven to 325 degrees. Add beans and the cooking liquid to the casserole. Mix well and add more water if beans are not covered. Bake, uncovered, about 1½ hours or until browned.

SOYBEAN-MINT SALAD
(Serves 4)

2 cups cooked soybeans or 1 can (15½-ounces), drained
1 cup diced zucchini with skin
1 firm eating apple with skin, cored and diced
1-3 cup sliced radishes
¼ cup diced red onion
1 tablespoon minced fresh mint or 1 teaspoon dried
½ teaspoon salt
2 teaspoons fresh lemon juice
½ cup soy mayonnaise (see recipe)

Combine all ingredients in a salad bowl and mix thoroughly.

SOY MAYONNAISE
(makes 2 cups)

½ cup soy flour
½ cup water
½ teaspoon salt
½ teaspoon paprika
1 small garlic clove
2 or 3 drops tabasco
1 teaspoon grated onion
1 tablespoon tomato puree
3 to 4 tablespoons lemon juice
1 cup oil

Place soy flour, water, salt, paprika, garlic, tabasco, onion, tomato puree and 3 tablespoons lemon juice in an electric blender. Blend until smooth.

Turn blender on high speed and add the oil, drop-by-drop, until mixture starts to thicken. As it becomes thick, add oil a little faster. Stir in by hand the remaining lemon juice to taste.

HE HATCHED A FISHY RECORD

MARLINGTON, W. Va. (AP) — The 35½-inch-long, 17-pound brown trout that was reported caught on Elk River last week was actually lifted from a fish hatchery here, conservation officers said Friday.

Seventeen-year-old Michael Drost, who said he caught the fish at night using a live field mouse for bait, was fined $108.

"The boy also agreed to pay the cost of having the trout mounted and to return it to the hatchery," conservation officer Capt. Lawrence Wyatt said.

dear abby

DEAR ABBY: Thank you for mentioning in your column that you carry on your person two cards, indicating that you have donated your eyes and your kidneys after your death.

I read it while visiting my 18-year-old granddaughter who has been without kidneys for a year and has been kept alive by a dialysis machine. She is waiting for a kidney which we hope will be provided by a donor.

A suggestion in your widely-read column might serve as an impetus to some of your readers to follow your commendable example.

The good that could be accomplished by such generous action is immeasurable and could extend to generations yet unborn! — A Minister.

DEAR MINISTER: Thank you for giving me another opportunity to say that no matter what else I leave behind, these, I think will be the most precious.

A few facts: Having once made such a commitment, you may revoke it at any time should you so desire. There is NO disfiguration whatsoever. Because of the time element, such donations may not be bequeathed in one's will because wills are usually read after the deceased has been buried. Organs are never sold. They are given free to those who need them.

For additional information, write your nearest hospital.

DEAR ABBY: I am a Catholic widow married to a good Catholic widower. The problem is he won't let me into our bedroom while he's dressing or undressing. And if he's in the room while I'm undressing, he turns his head. He acts as if it's sinful for us to see each other undressed.

I thought maybe time would improve the situation, but it has been years, and he's still the same.

I must admit that our sex life is wonderful — in the dark. This may not seem like much of a problem but it makes me feel less of a wife, and I am hurt.

What is the official Catholic position on nudity, Abby? Perhaps the reason for my husband's attitude can be found there. — Frustrated.

DEAR FRUSTRATED: There is no Catholic doctrine on nudity. Nudity is the natural state and is so regarded in matrimonial affairs. You can't blame your husband's inhibited attitude on his religious upbringing. Leave well enough alone, lady. You're doing well where it counts.

Machismo Keeps Women at Home

RIO DE JANEIRO (AP) — Feminist leaders in Brazil are urging women to get out and work. But they are finding the going rough.

The reluctance of Brazilian women to take on careers, coupled with a tradition of "machismo" or male dominance, keeps most women in Latin America's biggest country tied to their homes and families.

"Brazilian women are lazy. They don't want to work," Romy Medeiros da Fonseca, lawyer and president of Brazil's National Council of Women, said in an interview.

"Our women have no independent ideas or opinions, nor do they realize how important it is for them to participate in Brazil's development."

The 1970 census showed that only one-fifth of the 50 million women in Brazil work. Of these, 37 per cent have service jobs such as shop clerks, telephone operators, cooks, bank tellers, receptionists and maids.

Twenty per cent work on farms and another 11 per cent have agricultural or domestic jobs that don't pay anything except food.

This leaves around three million women in professions and other non-routine jobs.

The council, whose first national convention drew about 200 delegates, is lobbying for a law requiring women between the ages of 18 and 21 to donate one year of government service in fields such as literacy compaigns, day care, education and first aid.

LONDON (AP) — A record-plugging scandal with widespread overtones of bribery and sex has hit the BBC.

Singer Dorothy Squires, model Janie Jones, former BBC producer John Dabbs and six others were arrested by Scotland Yard detectives in dawn raids Thursday. Six others are being sought.

Miss Squires was charged with paying Dabbs's vacation expenses to Malta and Gibraltar in co-operation with Edward Kassner, head of President Record Co. Kassner, believed to be in the United States, was among those sought.

Miss Squires was freed on bail and said: "I'm innocent. I passed out three times while the police questioned me." She accused Scotland Yard of "a waste of public money and public time."

Dabbs also was freed on bail. Miss Jones remained in custody accused of 12 offences, including procuring prostitutes for BBC officials and threatening a potential prosecution witness. Her former husband, U.S. pop singer and composer John Christian-Dee, also remained in custody, charged with threatening a witness "to pervert the course of justice."

SALESMEN CHARGED

Others charged in the indictments were mostly record salesmen. The amounts listed in the bribery accusations were about $125.

The BBC gave prominence in its radio and television news bulletins to the arrests.

JUSTICE IS COLOR BLIND

CALGARY (CP) — Art instructor Alice Tyler was sentenced to time in custody for defacing her car licence plates.

She has told her high school students for years that orange and blue do not go together well.

So, when Alberta's licence plates were issued in those colors she backed her teaching with a felt pen; she produced the province's only set of orange and black plates.

She argued in provincial court that she had not defaced the plates because the Oxford dictionary defines defaces as "to spoil the form or beauty, to disfigure."

She said she spoiled nothing: "They're such a clash — I improved the appearance of the plates."

Besides the sentence, she also had to pay $1 for a set of replacement plates which are the official color.

Obscure Guerrilla Group In Spotlight With Kidnap

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The kidnapping of a United States diplomat has suddenly thrust a once-obscure guerrilla organization into prominence in Mexico.

Almost overnight, the name FRAP has become commonplace. It stands for Fuerza Revolucionaria Armada del Pueblo — the Revolutionary Armed Forces of the People.

Up to now, Mexico had been relatively free of the urban guerrilla terrorism that has swept other parts of Latin America in recent years. Anti-government groups have sprung up and died out without doing anything to merit comparison with the Tupamaros in Uruguay or the underground groups in Brazil.

But FRAP succeeded by kidnapping U.S. Consul-General Terrance G. Leonhardy in Guadalajara May 4 and holding him until the government released 30 prisoners and arranged a ransom of $80,000. In all, Leonhardy was in guerrilla custody for 76 hours. He was not harmed.

The prisoners were flown to Cuba and given asylum. FRAP in the meantime won close to 50 million. Its per-wide publication of a manifesto assailing the Mexican government and emphasizing what it termed the injustices against Mexico's poor.

Authorities in the interior ministry, which deals with political matters and subversion, say they know little about FRAP — who its members might be, where its headquarters are or who might have directed the abduction of Leonhardy.

The manifesto was well-written and well-reasoned, indicating it was prepared by someone with an education.

Leonhardy, after his release, reported being asked questions apparently prepared beforehand by someone with more educational background than the man who handled the actual abduction and guarding. But he said he learned nothing about the organization.

Some government officials say they are not sure FRAP really exists as an established, permanent group.

The manifesto touched on some sore points in Mexican society. It noted the huge gap between rich and poor, charged exploitation of rural and urban poor by landowners and industrialists, accused the establishment of not providing educational opportunities to the poor and said that the poor and poorly-educated Mexicans are mistreated by police and politicians.

Mexico has a population of capita income is among the highest in the developing world, a bit more than $600 a year. But 13 million Mexicans live on less than that. About half a million "campesinos," or peasants, earn no more than 16 cents a day.

Changes to Act Muddle Vancouver

VANCOUVER (CP) — Amendments to the municipal act earlier this year have thrown the Greater Vancouver Regional District (GRVD) into confusion over the future of appointmests to the board.

One of the changes introduced by Municipal Affairs Minister James Lorimer called mayors or aldermen seeking election to regional boards to run for the office on a separate ballot.

Until this year board representatives were appointed by the municipal councils from among those elected in regular civic elections.

Mayor Art Phillips said that as it now stands, Vancouver would have to hold a special election this fall to choose its 1974 GVRD representatives.

"It would be a waste of $60,000," the mayor said, "because the city is not scheduled to hold another election until the fall of 1974."

In all likelihood, council members would decide among themselves who will sit on the board next year and then only those people would seek election and would be acclaimed, Phillips suggested.

He said this easy solution is not available to other GVRD municipalities where half the council is elected annually for a two-year term.

In New Westminster and North Vancouver District, for example, existing GVRD board members, Mayor Muni Evers and Mayor Ron Andrews would have to seek re-election this fall in a GVRD run-off, although their actual mayoralty terms run for another year.

"I think they (the government) are going to have to rethink this thing — it kind of creates a crazy situation," Phillips said.

"I can't see anything wrong with the present system of council's appointment of GVRD members except, I suppose, the new way will give a better consciousness to the public of the GVRD."

Phillips said the GVRD will make representations to the provincial government on the matter.

Failure Stabs Teacher

PATTERSON, La. (UPI) — Police said Gussie Mae Williams, 22, apparently angered because she would not graduate from Patterson High School, stabbed the teacher who had given her failing grades.

Police chief Jesse Paul said the young woman was charged with attempted murder and bond was set at $5,000 Friday.

Paul said when Miss Williams, who expected to graduate this month, learned she would lack enough credits because of the failing grade, she attacked Julia Teressa Duke with a six-inch blade.

The teacher was cut on the head, treated and released from hospital.

Funds Approved

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States Senate space committee approved a bill Thursday authorizing $3 billion for the space program in 1974. The $3,046 million is $30 million more than asked by the administration and $27 million less than approved by the House of Representatives space committee.

Japan Eyes Africa

LUSAKA, Zambia (AP) — Japan is turning its attention toward Africa, and the mineralrich central African country of Zambia is beginning to feel Tokyo's economic muscle.

Japanese economic penetration of the Zambian economy is based on a simple strategy: The Asians buy ore and raw materials and then invest to develop their extraction and export. Many of those raw materials return later in Japanese manufactured consumer goods.

If necessary, the Japanese will even do the prospecting for the raw materials.

Copper sales are dominating the two-way trade. Japan bought more Zambian copper in 1971, about $146 million worth, than any other nation.

Japanese consumer goods are starting to dominate many African markets in Zambia and other African countries. Cars, motorcycles, bicycles, cameras, electronic equipment and electrical appliances are the most popular items.

AID ZAMBIAN RAILWAYS

The latest involvement by the Japanese in the Zambian economy is a $30 million long-term loan at low interest rates. It is being used to modernize Zambia's railroads and radio-television network.

Tokyo's loan is merely a building block to stronger links between this landlocked country of 4½ million and Japan, said Ambassador Mobuyasu Nishimiya.

"It is the sincere desire of the Japanese government that the Japanese private sector—businesses and bankers—will regard this loan as a pump-priming measure, generating more enthusiasm among them to participate in Zambian industries," Nishimiya explained.

Japanese companies already have invested $44 million in this African "pump priming." These investments have gone into a nitrogen chemical factory, a gas collection and acid plant and a project modernizing Zambia's microwave link between Lusaka and Livingsbone.

Japan's expansion into Zambia does not appear to have been hindered greatly by its extensive trading with the white dominated regime in South Africa. Tokyo's representatives have consistently defended Japan's contacts with the South Africans.

"I think it is our right," said Ambassador Nishimiya. "Japan, unlike Zambia with huge copper deposits, is deprived of almost all natural resources. . . . We have to rely substantially on our exports.

"And our population is more than 100 million in a country half the size of Zambia. Trade is our life-and-death problem."

Indians Claim For Lost Land

CALGARY (CP) — The Stoney Indians have filed a claim with the federal Indian Claims Commission for 40,000 acres of provincial land around the Big Horn Dam in west-central Alberta.

The Indians contend that construction of the $43 million Calgary Power Ltd. dam and the flooding a 27-square-mile area near Nordegg destroyed their hunting grounds and trap lines, making it impossible for them to make a living.

Stoney chief John Snow said until a few years ago hardly any of the 150 Stoneys in the area, 148 miles southwest of Edmonton, received welfare.

"Now almost 100 per cent of them are on welfare."

Besides seeking compensation for damages, the Stoneys are also claiming part of the Kootenay Plains area by virtue of verbal promises they say were made during treaty negotiations with the federal government in the 1870s.

For the last three years, the Stoneys have conducted a research program, at a cost of $30,000 provided by the federal government, to substantiate their claim to legal title of the land.

The 40,000-acre claim was filed a year ago but the Indians made no public statement until it became apparent they were not getting any reply.

Some of the Stoneys in the area reside on the 5,000-acre Big Horn reserve which was leased to the Indians by the federal government on a 99-year basis in 1948.

The Kootenay plains near the reserve have been used by the Indians for summer encampments and ceremonial grounds for more than 100 years.

The land the Stoneys are claiming has been suggested for tourist development and is rich in mineral resources such as oil, natural gas and coal.

B.C. BIRDS DON'T WANT A SUNBURN

NEW YORK (CP) — Two British Columbia zoologists believe they have figured out why herons and some other wading birds often tilt their necks at a sharp angle when standing or wading slowly through water.

The birds are not, they concluded, simply scanning the waters for fish or estimating distances between their needle-sharp beaks and the darting prey beneath the surface of the water.

The tilted neck seems to be the heron's way of overcoming a problem familiar to any swimmer on a sunny day—the glare from sunlight reflected off the water's surface.

The discovery was reported in the April 20 issue of Nature, a British journal, by John R. Krebs and Brian Partridge of the University of British Columbia's institute of animal resource ecology in Vancouver. A sketch of head-tilting herons is featured on the cover of the journal.

Prof. Krebs and Partridge, a student assistant, observed the birds' characteristic posture during a study of the feeding behavior of the great blue heron along the Pacific Coast of Canada last summer.

The long-legged heron, which stands about four feet tall and is often mistakenly called a crane, was seen holding its neck at an angle for minutes at a time. Then, suddenly turning its head, it would strike at a fish.

The zoologists noted that the head-tilting occurred far more often on sunny days and only when the heron was facing at an angle to the sun—that is, not directly toward or away from it. They reported that herons "almost invariably tilted their heads toward the sun."

Two possible explanations were raised.

First, fish may try to avoid predators by swimming out of the bird's shadow and toward the sun. Thus, over a time, herons may have learned to lean out toward the sun and cut off the escape route. If that is true, herons should strike at fish most often immediately below their tilted heads—which the zoologists said is not the case.

Second, they considered a "glare hypothesis." If one stands in the water facing the sun at an angle, the sun creates a patch of glare on the water surface in its own direction. By moving their heads, the herons shifted the glare patch out of their line of vision without leaving a promising fish area.

Krebs and Partridge tested this theory by training a hand-raised heron to hunt for fish in an indoor pool. The "sun" was a 500-watt floodlight, the only source of light in the room.

The heron tilted its head in the direction of the floodlight. As the light was moved, the heron moved its head accordingly.

This led Krebs and Partridge to the conclusion, as they reported in Nature, that head-tilting seems related to glare and "presumably enhances the hunting efficiency" of herons in sunny weather.

The appointment was announced Wednesday by federal Labor Minister John Munro.

Nomads In Jockey Shorts

By HOLGER JENSEN

WADI RUM, Jordan (AP) — They smoke filter tips and wear jockey shorts under their flowing robes, but the Bedouin of eastern Jordan are still as free as the desert wind.

Government attempts to settle the fiercely independent nomadic tribesmen have had minimal success. Spokesmen for the tribal council concede it may take two more generations.

Nowhere is this more apparent than on the desert highway passing Wadi Rum, a mile-wide avenue of sand between towering red and yellow sandstone cliffs where Lawrence of Arabia once led camel charges against the Turks.

As cars of holiday-makers whiz down the highway, two camel riders pause beside a sign proclaiming the "Al Mohammediye Exemplary Settlement Project." Nothing is built yet except the sign.

Would they like to settle there?

"Never," said Baghit Awad. "I would sooner die than live in a house."

Where are they going?

Awad pointed vaguely, 100 miles, 200 miles into the shimmering heat haze. "We look for grazing. We look for water." The camels plodded off into the swirling sand.

HABITS MUST CHANGE

Aly Abu Robaye is a modern Bedouin in a turtleneck and permanent press slacks.

"The Bedouin customs are good," he said. "But they must move into the 20th Century to gain equality with other Jordanians.

"Of course, it is sad to see the old ways go. But you cannot have illiterate and nomadic people in a modern Jordan."

Robaye forsook tradition to seek a university education in Turkey. He returned with a Turkish wife and a degree in geology and now works for the tribal council's settlement program.

"Water is the key," he says. "The Bedouin congregate around water. Once you sink a well you can get enough Bedouin together to give them other services—housing, medical care, transportation, electricity. Then you can try to persuade them to take up farming."

PROGRESS SLOW

The tribal council hopes to build 45 settlements around wells within three years. So far only four have been completed.

Jafr, in southeastern Jordan, offers Bedouins a stone house with electricity for $15. Only one resident has taken up the offer, a non-Bedouin schoolmaster.

Tents are pitched beside nearly every house in Al Husseiniye, another settlement. Abdullah Salim, a young Bedouin army sergeant, lives in a tent and keeps his goats in the house.

"I like living near the highway," he says. "It makes it easy to visit my family when I am on leave. But the tent is cooler."

Only a few thousand Bedouin have moved into settlements and more than 50,000 still are classified as "wandering tent dwellers" by the government. They follow their flocks on seasonal migrations that cover 300 to 400 miles in a year, often ignoring the border formalities of Syria, Iraq and Saudi Arabia.

CAMELS VITAL

Camels are still the main mode of transportation, also providing work, food and leather. A Bedouin treats his camel better than his wife for, in the desert, if a camel lives its rider lives.

A large fat camel can hold up to 140 pints of water and serves as a portable distillery, converting the water into milk without cream.

At a small stone fort in Wadi Rum, there are eight corpsmen to patrol 300 square miles of desert. The next outpost is 50 miles away.

"Lonely, yes, but it is a good life," said Sgt. Aly Dhailan, a 13-year veteran of the Camel Corps.

PAPER MICE by the dozen are produced by students attending an inter-municipal workshop to brush up their skills as playground supervisors and assistants. The six-day workshop, which continues next week at Cedar Hill Community Centre, prepares the girls to work in municipal parks this summer. (John McKay photo.)

Official Pandemonium In Island Condominium

VILA, New Hebrides (AP) — The New Hebrides has more governments than movie theatres, a separate language for every 700 people and 900 international company board meetings a year.

French gendarmes keep order unless someone they arrest chooses to be jailed by British constables. And the other way around.

This collection of 72 breathtaking islands in the South Pacific is the only place in the world run by two powers at once. It is properly called a condominium but is known widely as the pandemonium.

The British and French each have immigration counters at Vila's tiny airport and resident commissioners in black sedans — a Jaguar and a Citroen — flying flags of equal size.

And if two governments aren't enough for the population of 85,000, they share a third condominium government which combines some services, but triplicates others.

The subjects include Pentecost Islanders who leap from 70-foot towers toward the ground, hoping the vines tied to their ankles are exactly 69 feet 11 inches long and unbreakable.

Eight different varieties of missionary have brought western fashions and tin roofs to most of the New Hebrides, but some tribes still hold tightly to their customs and religion.

HAVEN FROM TAXES

Businessmen have recently discovered the islands as a tax haven, touching off a boom and adding a whole new bass section to the New Hebrides comic opera.

The law requires only a nameplate on a door, an annual audit and a board meeting.

Most sessions last only a few minutes under the stained ceiling of Rossi's Hotel Terrace, helped along by Australian lager.

Six new banks have opened up to deal in the two separate New Hebrides currencies, Pacific francs and Australian dollars.

It has all brought formality to Vila — shoes and socks are now "de rigueur" during office hours, although only the French and the tourists wear long pants.

Still, despite the day's brief traffic jam, life continues at its friendly, sensible pace. The French shops which measure in kilos open at 7 a.m. and close for lunch at 11 a.m. The British ones using pounds and ounces open at 7:30 a.m. and close at 11:30 a.m.

POINT FINGERS

"It's all right except the Froggies can be a little sticky," offers one long-time resident of English background.

"Well, you understand, it is the British who cause some difficulties but things are fine," says an aging Frenchman.

Such services as telecommunications are run jointly, using — whatever language technicians and administrators can work out among themselves.

Since the telephones were British, the telex system had to be French.

Nonetheless, French and British officials make an obvious effort to work within the system and, after a fashion, it functions.

If nothing else, residents here say, it all makes for stability.

"This will be the last colony in the world," a retired French captain said gleefully into his beer. "The British will never leave without the French, and the French will never leave."

Rio Suburb a Tough Town

Some recent highlights:

—Two armed men tried to hold up the fare collector on a city bus. Eighteen of the 20 passengers pulled out guns, shot one of the robbers dead and wounded the other.

—A truck driver called for help after a daylight stickup. Passersby converged on the fleeing gunman and beat him to death.

—A local resident strangled a prostitute he had been living with and stuffed her body into a septic tank, following an argument. A jury acquitted him, on grounds he was "defending his honor."

—The Nova Iguacu "death squad," a vigilante group said to be made up of off-duty policemen, killed 250 local underworld figures in a single year.

CHIEF DEMURS

"Nova Iguacu has been the victim of a campaign of sensationalism," says Police Chief Luiz Gonzaga. "Of course we have crime. But our rate is lower than that of Rio or New York."

He did not, however, give the rate figure for Nova Iguacu.

A notice outside the chief's door asks citizens to blow the whistle on "disorderly persons, bumbs, drug addicts, people walking around armed, robbers wanted by the authorities, numbers racket headquarters and bordellos."

Located 15 milles from downtown Rio, Nova Iguacu grew in population from 33,000 in 1920 to 146,000 in 1950 to 750,000 today. People from all over Brazil streamed into the city to find work in the prosperous Rio area. Public services could not keep pace.

As a result, Nova Iguacu today lacks paved streets, piped-in drinking water, telephones, schools, hospitals and police protection.

LURED BY PROSPERITY

"Nova Iguacu is an El Dorado," said Gonzaga, 47, a thin, soft-spoken father of eight who has devoted nearly half his life to police work. "Where there is progress, there is crime. Criminals are attracted to Nova Iguacu like moths to light.

Gonzaga's force is made up of about 100 inspectors and patrolmen and seven police vehicles, most of them usually in the repair shop.

When citizens come to police headquarters to file a complaint, sometimes the only way they get an officer to investigate is to take him to the scene of the crime in a taxi. The complainant pays the cab fare.

The police station in one district of the city, called Queimados, population 200,000, has no telephone. "If something important happens in Queimados, the assistant chief there comes over here and tells me," Gonzaga said.

"Things are improving," Gonzaga said. "In the past year, we have eliminated 'death squad' activities by 99.9 per cent: The great majority of the people of Nova Iguacu—including the police —are law-abiding citizens."

What about instances in which residents have taken the law into their hands by beating up suspected robbers?

NO ANSWER, GIRL, 6, DIES

TORONTO (CP) — A coroner's inquest was told that a six-year-old girl died of a respiratory illness in the emergency wing of a Toronto hospital after a specialist's answering service failed to locate him.

Catherine Pignatelli of Toronto was admitted to hospital March 18 by her mother after the girl's common-cold symptoms appeared to develop into something more serious.

Dr. Ewe Goh testified he had made three attempts to locate Dr. R. V. Ogilvie, a nose, ear and throat specialist, through his answering service.

Dr. Ogilvie, who said he had been in a restaurant at the time Dr. Goh had tried to reach him, told the inquest he had called his answering service from the restaurant but that there were no messages.

An autopsy on the girl's body located a bacteria which causes a rapid and dangerous disease called epiglottitis.

Doctors who had tried to treat the girl testified that her epiglottis and larynx were so swollen that it was almost impossible to find where the windpipe opening should be.

Want Governing? Then Go North

OTTAWA (CP) — Northern residents who complain they are overgoverned got some reluctant backing from Digby Hunt, assistant deputy minister of the federal northern affairs department.

Replying in committee to questions from Flora Macdonald (PC—Kingston and the Islands), Hunt said there are 2,910 territorial and 2,415 federal public servants in the Northwest Territories, which has a population of roughly 35,000.

In the Yukon, with a population of more than 20,000, there are 1,225 territorial and 858 federal public servants.

This did not take into account 281 Ottawa employees of the department, or hundreds more working for transport, environment and other departments here.

Under questioning, Hunt agreed that while the N.W.T. population is predominantly Indian and Eskimo, this is not reflected in the government payroll.

The record of the territorial governments was similar. The N.W.T. government employed 291 natives, the Yukon 73.

Hunt said the natives generally occupy the lower echelons of the work force. But efforts are being made to rectify this, he said.

GIRL RAPED IN PARK WHILE MAYOR SPEAKS

NEW YORK (Reuter) — A teen-age girl says she was held captive and repeatedly raped in Central Park here while, a few hundred yards away, Mayor John Lindsay told a crowd the park is "very safe indeed."

The girl, a 16-year-old high school student, told police a man grabbed her, pulled her into a clump of bushes, ordered her to disrobe and raped her four times from noon until about 5 p.m. Thursday.

About five blocks north, Lindsay held a news conference in the park at which he announced increased police patrols of the city's parks and accused the press of not reporting favorably on the safety of the parks and thus misleading visitors.

Rapid-Fire Changes Bring Age of Anxiety

By REV. J. A. DAVIDSON

We are now living in the middle of the most far-reaching revolution in the history of civilization. Dr. Dennis Munby, an Oxford economist, put it in this way: "Never before have human beings seen so many changes in the environment in the course of a lifetime. Within the lifetime of each of us more changes in the economic environment occur than occurred previously in thousands or tens of thousands of years."

Fifty years ago a father could quite properly assume that his son would grow up into a world recognizably like his own.

A child born this year will reach adulthood in a world quite different from ours, and imagination utterly fails us when we try to picture the world in which his or her child will live.

Man today is frustrated and frightened in his attempts to assimilate what Arnold Toynbee calls "the marvellous and monstrous apparatus of Western technology."

Events come faster than we can deal with them.

We show signs of letting ourselves be overwhelmed by circumstance, circumstance of our own making. This age of great achievement and great expectation is also the age of great anxiety and great despair.

We now hold in our hands the power to abolish all famine and poverty throughout the world; we now hold in our hands the power to anihilate ourselves.

In all parts of our society there are ominous signs of failure of nerve.

And, meanwhile, back at the Church . . . How adequately is the Church responding to rapidly changing circumstances?

Is the Gospel of Jesus Christ being proclaimed in ways relevant to the fears and insecurities of people today, in ways that can speak healingly and redeemingly to the human situation today?

Christians today must recognize that there can be changes, quite revolutionary changes, in expressions of the faith without there being any repudiation of the faith itself, without the integrity of the faith being endangered.

The Church is not called to preserve orthodoxies as such — orthodoxies in expression of belief, orthodoxies in worship, orthodoxies in organization and program.

It must be concerned primarily with the fundamental Christian realities which the orthodoxies were originally designed to express and to protect.

There is, of course, little value in change merely for the sake of change. But there is even less value in refusing to make changes because change may make us feel a little uncomfortable for a time.

The renewal of the Church, renewal for mission in and for the emerging technological society, will not be brought about by exercises in pious nostalgia.

Renewal of the Church requires the openess, the adventuresomeness, the moral and intellectual audaciousness, which we find expressed in the New Testmanent.

Perspectives And Prejudices

Six Safety Awards Taken By Forest Industry Firm

VANCOUVER (CP) — The Workmen's Compensation Board has announced that Crown Zellerbach Canada Limited has won six meritorious safety performanee awards for 1972.

The awards, made public Friday, are made annually to forest industry firms that have achieved the lowest accident frequency rate in their class the previous year.

Crown Zellerbach won four awards in the logging, sawmill, plywood and pulp and paper industries. In logging, Crown Zellerbach had an accident frequency rate last year of 10.94 compared with the logging industry average in B.C. of 70.45.

In the sawmill division, Crown Zellerbach employees worked more than one million hours with an accident frequency of 10.6 compared to an industry average of 54.51. In the plywood division, the company's Fraser Mills plant had an accident frequency rate of 3.30 as against an industry average of 27.66.

Crown Zellerbach's Elk Falls pulp and paper mill had a 7.46 accident frequency rate compared with an industry average of 14.02.

In the millwork class, the top award went to Sauder Doors Limited of Richmond with an accident frequency of 6.55. The industry average was 27.66. And among shingle mills, the award went to the Stave Lake cedar division of Canadian Forest Products Limited with an accident frequency rate of 19.09 against an industry average of 104.51.

Insurance To March

VANCOUVER (CP) — The B.C. Automobile Association, largest carrier of automotbile insurance in the province, will continue issuing new policies up to the March 1, 1974, provincial takeover.

Jack Chestnutt, manager of member services for the association said the BCAA "hopes to end up as agent for the provincial government's auto insurance scheme, and there's a good chance we will."

Allstate Insurance this week announced it will cease to write up new policies.

Ice Cream Man Hustles Good Life

By BOB NEILAND
Forum Features

LONDON—"You might not like what I do," my friend, the ice-cream man, said to me the other day. "But you've got to admire my enterprise. I mena, some of the time I can't even believe it myself."

My friend, the ice-cream man, is not noted for his modesty, I should perhaps explain.

If he had been modest it is doubtful whether he would be much richer today than he was four years ago when he arrived in London from Glasgow.

There wasn't much spare change in his pocket when he quit Scotland—just another working-class bloke heading south to find his fortune or, at any rate, a steady job.

But the summer was just beginning and he managed, with the help of a friend already in the business, to get himself a job as an ice-cream man on the tourist beat in London's Soho district.

"And it took me only a month or two to realise what was available to me," he told me over a double scotch in one of the British capital's top hotels. "It was easy pickings, I tell you."

His face was peeling from sunburn and he had only recently returned from a round-the-world holiday.

"There's not much happening here before the tourist season starts and what good is money unless you spend it?"

How, then, does my friend, the ice-cream man, make his money? "It's simple," he says. "They're so naive, these tourists who come to London. I mean, I charged these Mexican tourists £3.50 for an ice-cream cone—and they bought four—one day.

"It was a giveaway. They told me to hurry up because they had to get back to their hotel and then to the airport to catch a plane home. Well, they wouldn't be around to complain the next day, would they?"

"They were so damned aggressive—so I thought I'd do 'em proper. They handed over the money without so much as a bloody murmur. It's a temptation to do it—and no one believes how easy it is. The ice-creams I sold the Mexicans were the same ones a mate of mine sells to English kids in the suburbs for four or five pence. Well, you can't lose can you?

"I charge an Englishman 10 pence and he moans like hell—but that's the price, take it or leave it. I charge a lot of the foreigners the same price. That's where a lot of the blokes made their mistake.

"They charge everyone double or treble prices and give the trade a bad name. Now I charge most people the right price—but when I see a sucker I really go to town.

"I really screw 'em—but I'm careful. And I make more money than most of my mates. How many ice-cream men do you know who take round-the-world holidays?"

I must confess that all this foreign travel has exchanged my friend, the ice-cream man. It has, shall we say, broadened his mind.

To be blunt, it's made him more of a rogue than he ever was.

"After my first trip abroad I came back with a few new ideas—and I've reinforced my attitudes after each trip. There are certain countries I've visited where people really tried to rob me. You know, they sell you something and charge you a bloody fortune. So, I thought, okay. What can you do but pay up?

"But I said to myself: 'Wait till this lot comes to London—they'll get their just desserts and more.' I mean, it's just my way of getting my money back, right?

"I've no regrets about overcharging Mexicans. I went to Tijuana on my last trip and, hell, they were over-charging me all over the place. I fell the same way about Taiwan Chinese—also experts at fleecing you.

"You may find it surprising but, although I expected to get done, no one ever robbed me or over-charge me in India. So I make it a matter of principle never to fleece an Indian.

"Mind you, you can't take indulgence too far and if the bloke's a Pakistani I'll take as much as I can get because I've never been to Pakistan and I owe them no favors.

"I love taking North American men for a ride. They are so pushy and arrogant—the worst kind of tourist—and they think they know all the answers. They're lucky if they leave my stall without being, how shall I put it, generously overcharged.

"But I'll never be less than fair to Americans girls. I just love their voices. Now, there was this girl I stayed with when I was in California . . ." He digressed for the next 15 minutes.

My friend, the ice-cream man, will be in Soho again this summer. So, if you're visiting from overseas, perhaps I should warn you against him.

And, I guess, there must be two or three dozen like him offering everything from raspberry ripple to rum-'n'raisin.

Radical Action Planned By Australia to Keep Oil

By VINCENT MATTHEWS
CP Correspondent

CANBERRA (CP) — Amid growing evidence of a world fuel crisis, the Australian government is preparing radical action to protect the country's energy resources.

Discoveries of oil in the 1960s have put Australia in the position of producing nearly 70 per cent of its oil needs. But the new Labor government is concerned at the world fuel position and is moving towards the establishment of a national petroleum and minerals authority.

In this world crisis, Australia's sympathies lie more with the producing countries than the major industrial nations.

This was reflected in a statement to Parliament by the minerals and energy minister, Rex Connor, who said "nations like the United States and Japan, having depleted seriously their available resources and being heavily dependent on imports, particularly of crude oil, are now turning to 'resources diplomacy' to provide for their future needs."

DEFENDS PRODUCERS

Referring to the attitude of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, Connor said the nations in this group believe it is better to hold "black gold" in one's own ground than green paper in someone else's.

"In these circumstances," said Connor, "it may no longer be in a nation's interests to maximize production of an exhaustible resource which may be its only counter at the diplomatic game table."

The implication is clear that the Australian government, in both oil and in minerals, will adopt radically different policies from its predecessor in what it sees as Australia's national interest.

While the political benefits to the government in this policy are high—there would be widespread popular support in an "Australia first" approach the effects on business have been serious.

Mining and oil shares on Australian markets have slumped and the confidence of major companies, whether locally-owned or overseas-owned, in the future of the Australian oil and mineral industries has been badly shaken.

LEADERS ALARMED

Industrial leaders gained no comfort from Connor's warning: "Exclusive control of Australia's fuel and energy resources is much too serious to be left to individual companies, whose present status flows from the absence of a true national fuel and energy policy."

The government is concerned that while an estimated $843 million has been spent on oil and gas exploration in Australia, the value of the discoveries so far is more than $14,000 million.

The potential value of oil and gas deposits in and around Australia is considered enormous. Australia's continental shelf of 1.25 million square miles is the world's largest, but the government is arguing that the search for oil is not intensive enough.

The government's bureau of mineral resources estimates that 70 per cent of offshore exploration interests are held by foreign companies.

OIL RIGS FEW

On the North-West Shelf, a potentially oil-rich area off the West Australian coast, three oil rigs are operating in an area of 140,000 square miles. In a comparable area in the North Sea, 40 rigs are operating.

Under these conditions the government's appeal to the freshly-tapped nationalism in Australia is bound to have a response. The argument is that if private enterprise cannot protect and develop properly the nation's natural resources then the government must step in.

It has all been chilling news for business leaders, already complaining at falling revenue from mineral exports as a result of the devaluation of the American dollar. Many Australian mineral sale contracts with overseas companies were written in U.S. dollars and thus went down with devaluation in February.

And he refused even to discuss compensation for such losses.

He made clear, too, that the government would not tolerate further foreign control of Australian mining companies and said the present 62 per cent foreign ownership of the mining industry would be the maximum.

This new "Australianism" has been causing diplomatic ripples especially among British and American envoys in Canberra.

In the present political climate in Australia, his warning will fall on deaf ears.

Students Killed

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Two students were killed Thursday in a clash between opposing groups of students at the University of Sinaloa, in Culiacan, 900 miles north of Mexico City. In Mexico City, a group of 500 students recently expelled from the National University have taken over a 12-floor building to protest "ineptitude of university authorities in their handling of student problems."

REALISTIC PRICES ON ENERGY URGED

REGINA (CP) — Saskatchewan has energy resources to fill requirements for at least 500 years but shortages in other areas have serious implications for the province, Environment Minister Neil Byers said.

Byers, speaking to a meeting of the American Society of Heating, Refrigerating and Air Conditioning Engineers, said both the province and Canada will have to develop long-range energy policies recognizing "our own needs as well as the changing requirements in the rest of the world."

He said a more realistic pricing system is needed for energy, one which reflects the relative world-wide scarcity of usable energy sources. The true costs of energy resource development must be reflected, including reclamation, transmission and environmental protection.

Conservation is required to reflect greater efficiency in production as well as in use. Governments must have a more significant role in planning and co-ordinating policies.

CHESSMASTER

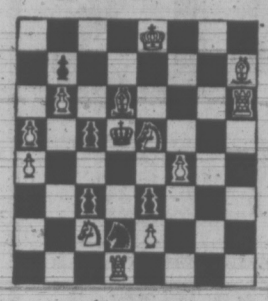
PROBLEM
By C. A. PEARSON
BLACK: 6



WHITE: 12

White to play and mate in two moves. Solution below.

A COLUMN FOR A LATE SPRING DAY

LONGEST GAME

The longest masters tournament game ever played lasted 168 moves! The 1907 Carlsbad Tournament was the scene of this gigantic struggle. Six sittings consuming 22½ hours were required before Oldrich Duras, who had lost a pawn at his seventh move against Heinrich Wolf, capitulated. Even when Wolf had two Queens against his lone King, Duras hung on (hoping perhaps for an earthquake).

Other lengthy battles were: Duras-Janowski (San Sebastian, 1911), 161 moves; Lipschutz-Bird (New York, 1889), 159 moves; Mason-Tchigorin (Monte Carlo, 1902), 144 moves; Mackenzie-Mason (London, 1882), 144 moves; Pillsbury-Suchting (Hanover, 1902), 139 moves; Tchigorin-Delmar (New York, 1889), 136 moves; Baird-Mason (London, 1883), 121 moves.

To Duras goes the doubtful credit of participating in (and losing) the two longest games on record!

A PROBLEM IN CHESS LITERATURE

Speaking of scholars, perhaps some reader can tell me who wrote the story about the old sourdough in Alaska who was carrying on a game of chess by mail with an old friend back in Seattle. Mail moved by steamship and was slow. One day a blizzard blew in just when the mail was due.

The old miner, however, was dauntless. He fought his way through the driving snow and, in a state of exhaustion, reached the settlement, staggered into the store, collapsed and died gasping for his letter.

When the proprietor opened the letter, he found no chess move but, instead, the news that the player in Seattle had collapsed and died over the board as he was pondering his next move.

Wonderful World of Animals

By DR. FRANK MILLER

DEAR DR. MILLER: For a couple of days our cat acted very strangely and we didn't know why. We thought maybe he was going blind but then he snapped right out of it again. An acquaintance stopped by and admitted he had given Peter (the cat) some LSD as a joke! Some joke. Peter seems all right now. Is there any reason to worry about his vision or is this a likely effect? M.L.

DEAR M.L.: Presumably Peter would get by with no after-effects though it would be difficult to be sure. As far as visual acuity is concerned, it's interesting to note that LSD may actually improve the accuracy of visual descrimination even though the ability to respond to the visual picture is reduced. I agree with you, though, that getting an animal "stoned" on any drug, including alcohol, is a dirty trick at least and possibly a very dangerous one.

DEAR DR. MILLER: I wonder if you can help me find the answers to a couple of questions concerning mating activities of chickens? First, how many times a day does a rooster mate and second, what does the peck order have to do with the mating behavior? — H.E.

DEAR H.E.: The number of times a male chicken mates per day may range from 25 to 60. (As with many species, it frequently depends on opportunity and available energy.)

The social standing of the males makes little difference. They all tend to prefer neither the highest nor the lowest ranking hen as sexual partners but are, instead, attracted to the "middle class" hens.

Dear Dr. Miller: I was just reading an ad claiming that you can make $10,000 in a year or better raising catfish. It sounds like something I'd like to do. Is it really possible?—T.Y.

Dear T.Y.: Many would be willing to tack on $10,000 to their yearly income. Some would even be willing to raise catfish to accomplish it. Undoubtedly, it can be done by selling enough catfish for enough money with a built-in margin of profit on each sale, though that is infinitely easier to say than do. Of course, the ones having the best chance of accomplishing this would be the catfish ranchers who sell to other potential catfish ranchers. This is known as getting in on the ground or, in this case, the bottom floor.

SOLUTION TO LAST WEEK'S PUZZLE

FIRE CHIEF 'REWARDED' FOR WORK

TORONTO (CP) — Fire Chief William Simpson of the Borough of York received a pleasant surprise Friday when he opened his mail.

He found five $20 bills and an unsigned, hand-wirtten note.

"Chief: For a job well done by your men," it read.

The reward apparently was for the fire department's work in containing Monday's multi-million dollar fire at Ashland Oil Co. Four Ashland workers were killed.

So he donated the $100 to York Township Firemen's Welfare Fund, which assists widows and orphans of firemen.

Judge Peddles Hot Dogs

NEW YORK (AP) — The high cost of living is reported to have led at least one $31,825-a-year civil court judge to peddle hot dogs at Yankee Stadium on weekends to augment his income.

"We're not looking to make money out of the job, we're just looking for living wages," declared Judge Lester Sacks, president of the civil court's Board of Judges. He said take-home pay is about $17,000.

Jacks was commenting on an article in the New York Law Journal that described an unidentified judge who "pocketed his pride" and took a weekend job selling hot dogs.

"In Queens," Sacks complained, "we're conducting trials in cloakrooms, or in subdivided courtrooms with plywood partitions."

"An attorney in one room yells, 'Objection!' and the judge in the next room yells 'Sustained!'"

Planning Your Rhododendrons Is a Complicated Business

GARDENING
jack beastall

The rhododendron is no longer a plant set aside for use on large wooded estates. It is now seen in the smallest of gardens and in some unlikely locations.

Most of us buy a rhododendron on impulse; we cannot resist when we see a plant smothered with blooms, but we soon have a lot of questions that need answering.

From the angle of the home gardener seeking advice it is unfortunate that over 800 species have been found in the wild since the first introduction in the mid-eighteenth century. The thousands of hybrids resulting from breeding and cross-breeding further complicate matters.

The name is a combination of two Greek words, rhodon, a rose and dendron, a tree, hence the rose-tree, which aptly describes the 40 to 60 foot plants found in Asia.

In the genus Rhododendron we find species only six inches high, the Azalea division to four feet, compact plants and straggling plants, leaves from one-inch long to three feet in length, and several distinct flower shapes.

Such a motley collection gives rise to the frequent question as to why my rhododendron is not like my neighbor's.

Today we cannot get very far without a Rhododendron Handbook, which is comparable to a postage stamp catalog, increasing in size each year as new introductions are added. However, a small amount of knowledge and a large amount of common sense will give reasonable success in the home garden.

Local gardeners are fortunate in being able to view a large collection of rhododendrons in Playfair Park, located at the end of Rock Street, off Quadra, with another entrance from Tattersall Drive via Kathleen Street. The flower display will last from now well into June and is worth a visit every two weeks.

Locally we grow the kinds with small-to-medium length leaves, but we cannot strictly follow the old rule which says the "longer the leaves the deeper the shade."

If we place our rhododendrons in too shady a spot we have lovely foliage but few flowers. Planted in the sun we have good flowers but poor looking foliage, so we settle for the sunny spot and forego beauty of foliage.

All rhododendrons, which includes the so-called Azaleas, are surface rooting and will not flower if planted deeply. The top of the soil in the container should be set level with the surrounding garden soil. Weeds are removed by hand because any hoeing or digging will damage the surface roots and affect flowering.

Until the plant is large enough to shade its own roots, a surface mulch is needed for protection during our warm dry summers. For this we use compost, very old manure, or well dampened peat moss, spread about one to two inches deep, and applied in March before the soil becomes dry.

Young plants, for the first three years in the garden, are given three feedings, of one-half cupful of acid-mix or Rhodo-Azalea Mix for every foot of height between March 1 and April 15.

Established plants (after three years) receive only one feeding of one-half cupful for every foot of height in late March.

It is important that these quantities be distributed evenly over the entire root area, first watering the soil, then applying the fertilizer, followed by another watering the next day to carry the dissolved salts down to the roots. The mulch is applied after feeding.

Any fertilizer reaching the roots later in the season will cause soft tip growth that will be damaged in winter and limit flowering the following spring.

Rhododendrons naturally inhabit areas of high rainfall, up to 100 inches a year, therefore need careful attention to water requirements during our dry summers, especially in late summer and early fall when flower buds are initiated for the following spring display. Insufficent water during this period is a frequent cause of no flowers or dried up buds.

Conversely, the water must be tapered off as soon as possible to allow the soft new growths to ripen before the cool fall weather begins. If growth persists too late there will be extensive winter damage.

Since rhododendrons are evergreens in most instances, they need sufficient water in the soil over winter, especially when planted beneath wide overhanging eaves.

Being an acid-soil plant they do not tolerate lime in any form, and should always be planted at least three feet from a foundation or concrete walk.

The removal of seed pods after flowering is necessary on small plants and desirable until the plants reach quite large proportions.

The illustration shows where these seed pods are nipped off, also the new growth buds immediately below the old flower head. These buds must not be damaged.

Gardeners who cut off the old head also remove the growth buds and have few, if any, flowers the next year. The same loss of flowers occurs when the fastidious gardener clips the whole plant into a nice rounded mound. There is no regular pruning on rhododendrons or azaleas.

Flower buds that remain green and do not open, and those which turn brown and dry, must also be removed otherwise the new growth buds will not be activated.

Week's Work

Wallflowers which survived early winter cold and have now finished blooming, should be pulled out for composting. Try your hand at propagating unusual colors from cuttings taken now. End of May, sow seeds for next years flowering, also forgetmenots, sweet williams, foxgloves. These are all biennials.

Again go over the tulips to remove seedpod which forms behind each old flower. Keep all leaves the same as with narcissi, for they are used in manufacturing food for the bulbs, on which next year's blooms depend.

Vegetables will have made progress with the warm days of this week. Do whatever thinning and transplanting seems necessary.

If squash and tomato plants were put into the garden while it was warm, have box coverings ready to put over them if nights should again turn cool with frost at dawn.

By the end of next week sow runner and bush beans. They won't be up until near the end of the month.

Lions From U.K. For Zoo in Ghana

LAGOS, Nigeria (AP) — Africa's drive for development is polluting its waters, eroding its jungles and killing its wild animals.

Monkeys have become victims of insecticides.

Environmentalists estimate that the population of lions, zebras, gazelles, leopards and other animals in East Africa has been reduced to one-tenth of what it was 50 years ago because of poachers' seeking hides and the loss of thousands of acres of wild grazing lands to farmers and land developers.

Few statistics on pollution in Africa are available.

A recent study in Kenya shows that humans in that East African country are retaining residues of three different types of agricultural poison, including DDT.

Water-borne diseases such as cholera, typhoid and hepatitis have plagued many Africans because rivers and ponds are polluted.

The possibility of a major oil spill in Nigeria's booming offshore petroleum fields threatens the coastal swamplands of Africa's most populous country.

As far as is known, Nigeria only requires petroleum companies to "adopt all practical precautions to prevent pollution" and mentions no penalties.

BEACHES SPOILED

West Africa's beaches already are being spoiled by giant oil tankers carrying crude oil from Saudi Arabia to the United States and Europe via the Cape of Good Hope.

The ship's oil tanks are cleaned off the West African coast, disgorging an oily film that hardens into a tar-like substance when it reaches the palm-fringed beaches.

In Sierre Leone, the country's major industry of diamond mining is leaving scars on the earth as prospectors move from one site to another.

Peasant farmers, who make up 80 per cent of black Africa's population, are eroding soil with bush fires, improper rotation of crops and indiscriminate cutting of trees.

Growing populations across Africa are threatening age-old sanctuaries for wildlife as new towns expand and paved roads cut across the countryside.

Fishing experts in West Africa are alarmed at the pace of exploitation of fish beds along the coast.

"Eco-catastrophes are much more likely to occur in developing countries than in the industrialized countries that have far more resources to deal with them," said Maurice F. Strong, the Canadian secretary-general of the United Nations Conference on the Human Environment.

Rhodesian Government Wins Test

SALISBURY (Reuter)—The governing Rhodesian Front party won a key test of its popularity among white Rhodesians today when its candidate won a smashing victory in a byelection for Parliament.

Prime Minister Ian Smith campaigned actively in the election, warning that a close vote would be a sign of weakness and would "spell the end of the white man in Rhodesia."

Olds received 985 votes to 305 for Peter Hingeston of the Rhodesia party.

The election marked the first serious challenge by the newly-formed Rhodesia party, which based its campaign on the need for parliamentary opposition and for an internal settlement between the races.

Polluted Sewage Lagoon Result of Dumped Walnuts

VANCOUVER (CP) — The saga of the fiendish Chinese walnut oil that threatened to pollute the Iona Island sewage lagoon near Vancouver is over.

And the story behind the presence of the oil in the pond verges on the tragi-comic.

As the Greek freighter Aegis Brjvery was heading from China to Vancouver during the winter with a cargo including Chinese antique objects d'art, soccer balls and walnuts, one of the holds flooded.

Part of the job of cleaning up the mess when the ship arrived here was to pump the water into tank trucks and dump it in the sewage lagoon.

That's when large amounts of oil began to appear on the surface of the lagoon.

Assistant sewer superintendent Hans Krause voiced the theory that the oil had seeped into the water as the nuts sloshed around during their long voyage from China. When the entire mess was dumped into the lagoon, the oily sea-water went with it. In addition, the nuts continued to release oil into the water.

"We hand-sprayed it, but it kept coming back," said Mr. Krause.

"Finally, it became so thick that something drastic had to be done—to protect the birds that frequent the lagoon."

USED HELICOPTER

So Western Trans Spray Ltd., a Burnaby helicopter service, was hired to spray the oil with a dispersant manufactured by Diachem of B.C. Ltd.

Mr. Krause said the dispersant disposed of the walnut oil in short order.

The spraying technique for the disposal of oil slicks on inland waters is arousing considerable interest from the Greater Vancouver Regional District.

A recent slick in Still Creek, a tiny watercourse running through many areas of the Lower Mainland, was broken up in less than 20 minutes by the dispersant spread by helicopter.

Diachem consultant Melvin Z. Poliankoff said the material is a biodegradable substance which causes the oil to break into microscopic particles, enabling bacteria in the water to break it down into innocuous substances.

Mr. Poliakoff said it is conceivable that misuse of the chemical might harm the environment, but no damage results if it is used properly under supervision.

"With the chemical properly applied, it has the potential to save a lot of birds," he said. "I think a true environmentalist would want to get a hazard to the birds cleaned up as quickly as possible."

Weddings

Clark - Munro

Wedding vows were exchanged between Barbara Winnifred Munro and David Edward Clark at a 2 p.m. ceremony in St. Michael and All Angels' Church on Saturday, May 5, 1973. Reverend W. J. Hill officiated at the double-ring service uniting the younger daughter of Mr. and Mrs. K. J. Munro of Victoria, B.C., and the only son of Mr. and Mrs. S. E. Clark of Sidney, B.C.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride was radiant in a floor-length white gown designed by Kath Tunnicliffe of Coquitlam, B.C. The low empire dress of silk sparkle organza over moire lining was accented at the neck and hem by nylon ruche and Guipure lace. The full sheer sleeve was gathered to a wide cuff and closed with four tiny buttons. The floor-length veil with train was trimmed with matching Guipure lace and her lace-covered headpiece was accented with tiny seed pearls. The bride carried pink roses mingled with lily of the valley and stephanotis. Miss Cathy Munro, sister of the bride, attended as Maid of Honor, while Mrs. Peggy Fennell and Miss Mary Tunnicliffe assisted her. They were gowned in identical floor-length V-necked dresses of mauve, pink, orange and white screen-printed nylon de chine over mauve moire lining. To accent the dresses, each wore a hot pink picture hat and carried a basket of white, pink and mauve carnations. Dave Kerr of Sidney was best man. Ushering duties were shared by Ken Munro, brother of the bride, and Nick Loft of Sidney. The mother of the bride wore a pink and white embossed coat-dress with white accessories and a corsage of pink carnations. The mother of the groom wore a matching dress and coat in mauve with white accessories and a corsage of mauve carnations.

Comer - Pretula

A double-ring ceremony was solemnized on April 21, 1973, at 6 p.m., in Gordon Head Parish Church, when Heather Anne, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Pretula, 2033 Kings Road, exchanged wedding vows with Robert Joseph, youngest son of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Comer, 997 Ambassador Avenue. Reverend Frank Patterson officiated. The church was tastefully decorated with standards of yellow glads and white daisies, and planters of tulips, for the occasion.

Given in marriage by her father, the petite bride was lovely in a floor-length gown, made and designed by herself, of white embroidered Swiss cotton over peau de soie. Her chapel veil was held in place by a single orchid, and she carried a garden bouquet of white daisies with yellow centres and lily of the valley. The bride was attended by Mrs. Denise Sturmwind as bride's matron and Miss Tanya Comer, niece of the groom, as flower girl. They wore floor-length gowns of yellow floral flocked nylon and carried nosegays of white daisies with yellow centres and lily of the valley. Mr. Jim Farndon was best man and Mr. Robert Pretula ushered the guests.

A reception followed in the Royal Victoria Yacht Club, the toast to the bride was given by Mr. Tom Cheston. The wedding cake was made by the bride's great aunt, Mrs. S. H. Shaw and decorated by her aunt, Mrs. Elaine Pretula. A delightful smorgasbord dinner was served after which dancing was enjoyed by all to the music of the Checkmates.

For her going-away outfit, the bride chose a turquoise blue pant suit. A short honeymoon up-island followed. The happy couple are now residing in Victoria.

Lefebvre - Worsley

Mr. and Mrs. G. N. Worsley, 4067 Haro Road, Victoria, are pleased to announce the marriage of their daughter, Mary, to Mr. Marcel Lefebvre, son of Mr. J. B. Lefebvre, Cold Lake, Alberta, and the late Mrs. Lefebvre.

The ceremony took place in the Chapel at Queenswood House of Studies, Cadboro Bay, on March 31, 1973.

DON'T MISS OUR TERRIFIC SUNDAY BARGAINS!

POLICE WEAPONS against holdup men are displayed by Metro Toronto police. From left are a loud hailer, shotgun and bullet proof vest, and submachine-gun, all held by police officials.

Toronto Holdup Men Have Cause for Worry

TORONTO (CP) — Insp. Maurice Richardson, boss of the Metropolitan Toronto police's 14-man holdup squad, takes a lot of pride in his job and the men under him.

"We're known from one end of this country to the other—by the underworld and by other police departments," he said in an interview.

His pride can be justified by statistics. The squad, has solved seven of 11 bank robberies here this year. Last year it made arrests in 51 of 62 bank robberies.

It was formed shortly after the city and borough police forces amalgamated in 1957 and in the wake of the infamous Edwin Alonzo Boyd gang.

Insp. Richardson notes that Toronto has been free of bank robber gangs ever since.

"We're more close-knit than any other squad and we often all work together as a team," he said.

Although the squad has made its reputation in solving bank robberies, it also deals with all sorts of robberies and with crimes of violence.

He said the squad dazzled Windsor police early last year with their fast work in arresting the gang responsible for a $1,-129,000 bank holdup there. Within three days, the Metro squad had recovered $200,000 of the money and arrested five persons. Most of the remainder of the money was found later.

Now It's 'Super-Minister' Bob

Strachan, former NDP leader and one of the veteran parliamentarians on the government benches, came away from Government House after the swearing-in ceremonies with a new portfolio, a whole sheaf of responsibilities and the future presidency of the B.C. Railway.

Strachan becomes Minister of Transportation and Communications, taking from his old highways portfolio responsibility for the B.C. Ferries Service, the Motor Vehicle Branch, the Data Processing Branch and all government aircraft.

In addition, he stays on as president of the government-run Insurance Corporation of B.C. and becomes a member of the board of directors of the B.C. Railway.

When springtime rolls around again next year, Strachan will have become president of the railway, succeeding Barrett when negotiations with the federal government and several Barrett-initiated projects are brought to fruition.

If that was not enough, Barrett said in response to a question Friday that Strachan will be the minister responsible for all aspects of communications. The question had been if Strachan would be introducing machinery to allow the government to take over the B.C. Telephone Co., a project Barrett has often said is on the list of things to do for his government.

Barrett grinned as he said: "Mr. Strachan will be responsible for all matters of communication."

After all the ceremonies were completed, Strachan told reporters briefly of his initial plans as Minister of Transportation and Communications.

One, he said, is to negotiate with the federal government over the matter of jurisdiction over such services as cable television and telephone services. And, according to the NDP's game plan, another would be to sort out with the federal government the federal charter arrangement which B.C. Tel has, which amounts to the major stumbling block in the way of provincial control of the telephone company.

Strachan said he is looking forward to his new job and that he considers it to be "interesting, exciting and one of great potential. They'll keep me busy," he said.

The 59-year-old MLA from Cowichan-Malahat seems to thrive on hard work. With his new responsibilities, he feels he'll get lots of it, starting early next week.

He will be travelling to Ottawa for the federal-provincial first ministers' conference with Premier Barrett. After that, it's off to Londfon to talk to the famous company, Lloyd's of London, about the insurance business.

Insurance: Gov't Set To Fill Gap

Times News Services

VANCOUVER — If too many private car insurance firms cut back on coverage for B.C. drivers, the government insurance corporation will fill the gap until the government plan becomes operational next year, it was disclosed Friday by a spokesman for the Insurance Corporation of B.C.

Next March 1 is the beginning date for the monopoly government scheme.

"Plans are being developed in the event that it is necessary," said the spokesman. The statement was later confirmed by the general manager of the corporation, Norman Bortnick, although Bortnick sought to minimize the possibility of such an emergency, in line with the claim Thursday by Bob Strachan, minister in charge of government insurance, that there is no need to "panic" over indications of cutbacks by a number of firms.

"We will adjust to the situation as necessary," said Bortnick. "We would have to do what was necessary."

Meanwhile, Liberal leader David Anderson branded a "major scandal" the deal between the Insurance Corp. of B.C. and IBM Canada Ltd. without going to tender.

Anderson fired his shots while visiting Prince George and at the same time accused the news media of ignoring the issue because of its "honeymoon with the NDP government."

The computer is to cost $1.5 million a year, plus a once-only payment of $1 million for programming.

Anderson likened the deal to two other "scandals" involving the government. These he listed as a purchase without tender by B.C. Hydro of buses from a firm controlled by the Manitoba government and the B.C. law requiring firms doing business with the government to hire union labor only.

No Extra Ferries

Victoria Day weekend travellers who miss the 10 p.m. ferry between Swartz Bay and Tsawwassen will have to wait until the next morning to sail.

No extra sailings beyond the final 10 p.m. run will be made even if there are enough extra vehicles to warrant it, ferries traffic manager Bob Innes said.

"It's crewing problems and that's all I'm going to say," he said.

Innes said a big backup of vehicles waiting to leave after the 10 p.m. sailing "happens very rarely". He said it's unlikely that large numbers of motorists will be stranded on the mainland or on Vancouver Island because of the change.

There will be no extra sailings between Departure Bay and Horseshoe Bay either this weekend.

Documents Implicate President

Times News Services

WASHINGTON — Eleven new documents have come to light making it harder to "visualize" that President Nixon knew nothing about White House efforts to involve the Central Intelligence Agency in a cover-up of the Watergate scandal, Sen. Stuart Symington said Friday.

Symington (D-Mo.) said that CIA deputy-director Vernon Walters submitted to several congressional committees 11 typewritten memorandums on contacts between the White House and CIA involving both the Watergate and Pentagon Papers cases. Symington refused to divulge the contents of the memorandums.

A White House legal aide, meanwhile, has revealed in sworn testimony that the White House suspected Watergate conspirator James McCord of writing an anonymous letter four months ago warning against efforts to link the CIA to the bugging scandal.

Deputy White House counsel Fred Fielding told the story of the mysterious letter earlier this week to attorneys taking a pre-trial deposition in connection with the Democrat's $6.4 million Watergate suit against Nixon's re-election campaign organization.

Fielding said the letter was sent to former White House staff member John Caulfield just before McCord's January trial. McCord told senate investigators Friday that Caulfield, one of his personal friends, relayed to him from the White House high command an offer of

Times News Services

SALISBURY — Three shots were fired today from the Zambian side of the Victoria Falls where two Canadian girls were killed and an American was wounded Tuesday, Rhodesia police said.

The shots were fired down the second gorge at the falls, possibly at the bridge linking Rhodesia, the spokesman said.

Meanwhile the parents of one of the Canadians, Marjan Drijber, are en route to Johannesburg convinced their daughter is still alive.

"We are convinced in our own minds that Marjan is still alive. She is a very strong swimmer, in fact she was top of her class, "Oscar Drijber, 59, said. "She is a physically strong girl, an outdoor girl.

"As long as there is no body found then there is every hope that she is alive," he said.

A Rhodesian government spokesman said today Zambia's explanation for the shooting of two Canadian girls and the wounding of the American was quite unacceptable.

"The Zambian government is endeavoring to cover up this crime by trying to justify the barbarity of the act perpetrated by their ill-disciplined soldiers," the government spokesman said.

"In endeavoring to reduce the responsibility to one soldier' they are camouflaging the true facts. There is absolute evidence that a group of soldiers was involved and that they kept firing at the unfortunate victims for nearly three hours."

Killed in Tuesday's shooting were Christine Sinclair, 20 of Guelph, Ont., and Miss Drijber, 19, of Rockwood, Ont. John Crothers, 28, of Troy, Ohio, was recovering in hospital from wounds he received. His wife Carol, 25, escaped unhurt.

Miss Sinclair's body was recovered, but Miss Drijber fell into the Zambezi River and

BIG COLCEL RETURN

VANCOUVER (CP) — The British Columbia government could wind up 1973 with a $10 million profit from Columbia Cellulose Ltd., Vancouver industrialist James Sinclair said Friday.

Sinclair, a former federal Liberal cabinet member and the father-in-law of Prime Minister Trudeau, is a former director of Columbia Cellulose.

The company had forecast a $6 million profit before it was sold to the government, he said in an interview.

Premier Dave Barrett "has a couple of things going for him," he added.

"He got the plants for nothing and the new operation is from a much reduced debt structure. The other is the improving market in lumber and pulp."

Skyjackers' Bluff Called

MEXICO CITY (AP) — A hijacked Venezuelan airliner, carrying four leftist gunmen, 37 hostage passengers and crew and a Mexican government official, left for Cuba today after Venezuela turned down a demand for release of political prisoners.

The departure was announced shortly after Miguel Nazar, a Mexican interior ministry official who had boarded the plane to negotiate with the hijackers, radioed he was staying aboard to guarantee the lives of the hijackers.

He said the gunmen had promised to free the hostages — 32 passengers and five crew members — in Cuba.

Earlier the hijackers had threatened to blow up the plane and the hostages unless Venezuela released 79 political prisoners. Speaking to the plane by radio from the control tower Humberto Rumbos, first secretary of the Venezuelan embassy in Mexico, told the hijackers his government refused to meet their demand.

A letter from the hijackers listed the names of the prisoners and specified that they should be released and flown to Cuba within 48 hours of the time that the plane was hijacked over Venezuela. It was hijacked at 2:36 p.m. EDT Friday.

Addressed to President Rafael Caldera of Venezuela, the letter stated, "If you do not proceed to free the revolutionaries demanded in the attached list, we will proceed to destroy the plane with all its hostages."

The letter was delivered to authorities at the airport by a reporter from a Mexican paper and a civil aviation inspector.

'SPIRIT' MAKES BIG SPLASH

The model airplane built and piloted by members of the Victoria Radio Control Model Club was on a maiden flight from Ediz Hook at Port Angeles to Clover Point.

For the most of the flight the airplane was fine, but a mile and a half from Clover Point it nosedived into the water.

"There seemed to be some kind of failure in the aircraft and it came down," said Ed Parratt, man in charge of the flight.

Pilots Brace for Skylab Repair

Times News Services

HOUSTON — With their disabled space station awaiting an in-orbit service call, Skylab's astronauts today try out hastily-built tools they will use Friday in a bold attempt to fix overheating and power problems.

After working with the new-fangled sunshade apparatus and associated tools here, the pilots will fly to Huntsville, Ala., Sunday to practice under water where they float as if they were in weightless space.

Meanwhile sources said the Soviet Union scrubbed the launch of two cosmonauts earlier this week because an unmanned Soyuz spacecraft with which they would have docked in space apparently suffered an accident after it reached orbit.

No details of the accident are available, but it comes on the heels of a failure last month of the $500 million Salyut space station, and two weeks ago to a Lunokhod moon rover which fell into the Pacific Ocean. The failure this time of the Soyuz is the first of 20 manned and unmanned Soyuz spacecraft to undergo a failure in earth orbit.

The plan calls for Charles "Pete" Conrad, Joseph Kerwin and Paul Weitz to take off from Cape Kennedy Friday in an Apollo loaded with 90 pounds of repair and replacement equipment.

With moonflight veteran Conrad at the controls, the astronauts will circle the 118-foot Skylab and survey the damage resulting from an unexplained accident 63 seconds after launch last Monday that ripped off its meteoroid and sun shield and jammed two solar wing generators. Then they will start the first major repairs ever made in space.

Project officials were more optimistic late Friday than they have been since Skylab's problems. The engineers now believe Skylab will be able to serve as home for nine men—three crews — for a total of 140 days in orbit as originally planned.

Flight controllers today tried to dump possible poisonous gases from the cabin of the orbiting Skylab space station and repressurize it with fresh oxygen and nitrogen.

The action was taken to make sure Skylab will have a safe atmosphere when the astronauts fly up to try to fix the ship's overheating and electrical power problems.

The toxic gases apparently were generated by the 110-degree plus temperatures the Skylab cabin was subjected to earlier this week.

A NASA spokesman said flight directors started venting the contaminated cabin atmosphere Friday afternoon and stopped early today when the force of the exhausted gases turned the nose of Skylab to the right.

The Gentle Captain Gave Land He Loved To the People, But They Trampled Beauty Into Decay

His Gift Was a Dream But Vandals Ruined It

By PAT DUFOUR
Times Staff

If ghosts could walk, the shade of Capt. E. G. Beaumont would shake with anger as he viewed Discovery Island, the 151-acre park he left to the people of British Columbia.

By the time he died, aged 91, in 1967, Beaumont had shared the beauties of his island off Ten Mile Point with generations of youngsters — Boy Scouts, sea cadets and countless others. They explored its beaches, roamed through its grassy reaches and were shown the treasures in their host's home.

One of those boys was John Gornall of 2352 Tod.

This week he showed the Times what has happened to the island he's grown to love over the past 13 years.

Apart from two small plaques, one on Beaumont's decaying and mutilated home and the other on the house which was used by his servants, there is nothing else to tell of government attention.

Both inside the outside the Beaumont home the signs of abuse are overwhelming. Garbage is strewn everywhere and squatters with large drinking habits have littered the kitchen with smashed bottles. Bottles remaining intact run the gamut from cherry brandy to scotch, rum and rye.

Personal effects, letters and other belongings are scattered all over the place, probably rummaged from the empty trunks in the attic.

They include a picture of a stately woman, taken in 1896, and a letter of recommendation from a Sir Joshuah Rowley in which the lord commends Beaumont for the tutoring of his son, prior to his son's entry into Eton.

Broken panes of glass are everywhere.

The servants' quarters have fared better on the outside but, inside, boards have been ripped from the walls and ceilings.

The frame of the Morris Minor Beaumont used to drive around his estate lies twisted and rusting.

Near the marshland where generations of Mallards and other birds have rested there are now two duck blinds, each reeking with the stench of gunpowder. Empty shells of four different sizes litter the place.

The marshland is dry as a tinder box.

Government officials expressed dismay when informed of the situation by the Times.

"Because it is a relatively new park," deputy minister of parks and recreation Lloyd Brooks said, "we have no real schedule on it yet. There will be one later on in the year. There'll be garbage pickups, we may have to put warning signs up.

"There'll be increased observation by the parks department and people will be charged if they're caught."

Brooks said that more and more of his budget has to be spent on security because of vandalism in the province's parks, which number more than 300.

Among those parks are two more, donated by the man who became known as the King of Discovery Island.

These are the 513-acre marine park at Bedwell Harbor on South Pender Island and a 350-acre park on Fraser Lake, east of Prince George.

Brooks also promised that a wharf will be installed at Discovery and probably some mooring buoys placed in position.

Director of parks Bob Ahrens also promised action:

"We're aware that the foundations of the house are rotting away," he said, "but we should clean up the site."

More fire watches will also be kept.

"We're rather frightened about fire," he said, "we have to protect this valuable piece of property. We've had a near-miss already. Somebody left a camp fire burning on the west bay which overlooks Oak Bay. It crept up the slope but luckily the wind changed."

Ahrens also promised to do something to protect the wildlife on the island:

"People can shoot in provincial parks unless they're specifically closed," he said.

"This one," he added, "should be closed to hunting."

The Mallard ducks we saw resting on the pond near the marsh will be grateful.

So will the wild mink who looked us straight in the eye as we made ur way back to our beached boat.

Mace Shrinks Plans to Meet City

The controversial Bay Village development in James Bay has shrunk from its soaring original concept of 269 feet to a modest height of 70 feet, in a revised application submitted to city hall by developer J. A. Mace.

Apparently resigned to the fact he will never be able to push through his original 29-storey highrise proposal, on which he has fought city council for nearly three years, Mace has now presented a different plan with both height and density considerably scaled down.

Unlike his original proposal, which required the signing of a land-use contract with council, the latest submission fulfils all the requirements of the C1 commercial zone under which the three-acre site at Menzies and Simcoe is designated.

As a result, city hall sources indicated Friday, no serious objection is expected to be raised and approval of a building permit will follow fairly automatically once the routine checks have been carried out, including scrutiny by the Advisory Design Panel.

Mace said in an interview Friday the revised proposal conforms exactly to the C1 restrictions of 70-foot height and floor-space-to-land ratio of 1.4 to one.

The design of the L-shaped building has been prepared "in the best possible way we know how, architecturally and aesthetically," he said.

Mace said the decision to scale down the size of the development to "prevent any further losses," has meant a substantial loss in equity value to his company.

The building as now envisaged will accommodate only 160 suites, compared to the originally-proposed 250 apartments, and the commercial area has been effectively halved to about 50,000 from 100,000 square feet.

A city planning official said Mace's new scheme proposed a building with a series of "stepped-up", floors giving a terraced effect quite different from the original tower concept.

Although density would be greatly reduced, there would be larger floor areas above ground level than if the developer had been allowed to proceed with his 29-storey highrise.

"This is more of a European-type massing in terms of being fatter and lower rather than higher and thinner," the official said.

Zoning committee chariman Ald. Mike Young hadn't seen the plans Friday, but he said initial reactions from those who had was that the proposal was "not too exciting."

He added, however, that under the circumstances council can hardly expect to get a development proposal embodying more than the zoning calls for.

Fund Shortage to Kill 'Unteachables' Hopes

Victoria Teachers' Project is being forced to close its doors.

The school that has given more than 250 of Victoria's "unteachable" children a place to learn and a way to get back into the school system, has run out of funds.

School director Bill Benson said Friday the provincial cabinet has informed him they can not provide any financial support for the project, which has previously been funded through Local Initiative Programs.

Their L.I.P. grant runs out May 31 and no new federal funds have been granted.

The school's 15 workers hope to receive a special one-month L.I.P. extension to complete the school year but after that will be joining the ranks of the unemployed.

"I guess we'll just have to fold completely," Benson says, "unless somebody comes up with some money — but I can't see who will have more than the provincial government.

"They (the cabinet) gave us full praise for our work," Benson said, "I'm surprised they couldn't raise enough funds."

The project, through Education Minister Eileen Dailly, applied to the cabinet for $320,000 to expand their school to 20 teachers next year. For a year and a half the school has been running on L.I.P. grants totalling about $100,000 a year.

"Even if they'd given us one-half or one-third that amount, we could have survived until we got more funds," said Benson.

The project, which works out of Beacon Hill School, now has 12 full-time teachers who work on a one-to-one basis with 60 students needing special assistance with learning problems. They only accept children who have exhausted all regular channels of special education assistance.

"We've had professional people — principals, department of education officials, psychologists — all say our school is necessary and we are performing efficiently," the director said.

"We have an 87 per cent success rate," he said, with already 42 per cent of their pupils back in regular schools and working successfully.

The school follows the education curriculum set down by the department of education and Benson says they have a stringent academic program.

"When we say our students have passed Grade 6, they've passed Grade 6," said Benson, "and I'd be willing to match them with any other school in the province."

Benson says his teachers are all excellently qualified, many with masters degrees and special training.

The project will approach Greater Victoria school board for funds but Benson said it is not likely the board will be able to help them.

All the Fire Left Them Was Clothes They Wore

A mother of six children even lost the $15 she had just been paid for house work when fire destroyed the family's house at 2022 Richmond Friday evening.

Mrs. June Akehurst, 40, and her two boys and four girls ranging in age from nine to 20, escaped with just the clothes they wore when an electrical fault in a basement circuit box touched off the blaze.

Forty-nine tropical birds in a front room aviary perished in the fire but the family was able to rescue their dog and cat and pet hampsters.

One of the children is even without shoes today. The family is staying at the Estrella Motel.

A daughter said there was no insurance on the family's property in the rented house.

All the older children lost what money they had in the fire. Mrs. Akehurst's family allowance cheque was also burned.

Both the St. Vincent de Paul Society and the Salvation Army were organizing help for the family today.

A society spokesman said donations could be brought to the store at 560 Johnson. A spokesman for the Salvation Army said money donations could be brought or mailed to the army office at 769 Pandora. Furniture, bedding, clothing and food will be picked up if donors phone 386-3295.

The Richmond Road blaze was the second in rapid succession for city firemen Friday. Earlier in the afternoon they were called to a house at 1032 Balmoral where an electrical fault is also thought to be the cause of a blaze which did heavy damage.

The occupants were away at the time. Most of the contents of the rented house were saved but an estimated $6,000 damage was done to the building.

Saanich firemen were called out shortly before 6 a.m. today to douse a brush fire between Telegraph Bay Road and Tudor on Ten Mile Point.

It took about 2,000 gallons of water to extinguish the quarter-acre blaze which was smouldering deep in tinder-dry moss, a fire department spokesman said. He added he had never seen the bush this dry for the time of year.

NEW CITY MANAGER TO BE NAMED SOON

Announcement of Victoria's new city manager will be made by the end of the month, Mayor Peter Pollen said today.

Pollen refused to confirm reports that city comptroller Jim Bramley, 48, will be appointed to the position, which became vacant last month when former city manager Bill Hooson was fired by council.

He did say, however, that "serious consideration will be given to promotion from within." The position has not been advertised.

What's It To Be . . . Fish or Memories?

IN THE OYSTER RIVER country there once lived a son of the pioneers who remembered being upended and nearly drowned by a horde of spooked salmon. The Oyster no longer harbors fall spawning runs to match the invasion that bowled Walter Woodhouse off his feet during a fisheries count. But on the now-distant night when old-timer Woodhouse told this tale from his youth, salmon were still hosting into his river in numbers that tax belief.

Ascending fish made a constant watery commotion in the riffles. Their sheer mass covered the bottom of each pool and deeper reach with a black carpet. Surely nothing and nobody could threaten this seemingly inexhaustible resource.

The Oyster still produces salmon, cutthroat trout and steelhead in limited numbers. In view of the tribulations this and other Vancouver Island east coast streams have been subjected to, I consider that fact not far from a miracle.

The catalogue of the Oyster's misfortunes begins with the clearcut logging that denuded its watershed, guaranteeing an aftermath of fires, bankside erosion, wild freshets and summer shrinkage that bared its bones.

Diesel cats have lumbered about in its lower reaches, shifting its gravel beds, altering its flow and wiping out pools that were admirable holding grounds for its migrant fish populations.

The suggestion has been made that it be cursed with a reservoir from which water would be piped to augment the Campbell River municipal supply in periods of peak use. In a hot summer, that is to say, when our streams need all the flowage they can muster.

Its all-important estuary, the corridor by which salmon and coastal cutthroat trout enter its waters, has not been spared. As part of an ambitious recreation development, a dredged channel and boat basin have turned its relatively narrow estuary into a freeway for powered craft.

Sport fishermen and conservationists have protested at regional level against plans by the same private developer for a "test channel" which would carve a slot across the tidal flats near the river mouth. What the ecological effect of such a channel would be — or of the major dredging operation planned to follow — is anybody's guess.

The closest approach to an informed statement yet made on the subject was contributed by a provincial fish and wildlife branch biologist who attended a Comox Strathcona regional board hearing this month.

"Everything you do to a stream changes it," he said. "We just have to decide what is an acceptable level of change and what isn't.

"We do know that generally channeling is bad for fish production."

If we know generally that dredging, and indiscriminate logging, and water diversion, and destructively short-sighted fisheries management practices are bad for our streams, I suggest that we should be acting on that knowledge far more effectively than we have so far done.

I have focused on the Oyster because I have been a witness to its decline as a priceless natural resource.

I also think that it and other failing Vancouver Island streams could be restored if federal and provincial governments, acting in their respective spheres, would pay more than lip service to protection and restoration.

To be effective, a restoration program should begin at the north and south approaches to the Strait of Georgia and extend to the fountainhead of the last little feeder creek.

It should call a halt to bankside cutting, replant where necessary, and establish permanent buffer strips.

It should ban any stream-tampering that can't be justified absolutely in terms of the wealth of the waterway concerned.

It should regulate saltwater commercial and sport fishing, not to permit mere minimum escapement of salmon to their spawning beds, but to guarantee as far as is humanly possible that the spawning gravel is occupied to capacity.

Where man-made spawning beds would help restore the runs, these should be constructed. Their effectiveness has been proved on the Big Qualicum and some lesser waters.

No program worth attempting would countenance the reckless inroads into herring supply that in past years have reduced herring-feeding salmon species to near starvation in salt water.

Perhaps I'm unduly optimistic to believe we can continue to have trout and salmon using our Island streams in their seasons indefinitely. Not the fantastic runs that Walter Woodhouse remembered or even the lesser one that I recall, but fish enough to halfway justify our tourist advertising. We won't have them, however, unless those with power to re-build those runs take positive action.

And action, I maintain, is long overdue.

Copter Mercy Missions Rush Two to Hospital

A Canadian Forces helicopter from Comox airlifted a fisherman with a mangled arm and a logger with a crushed chest to hospitals Friday in a series of rescue bids stretching over 18 hours.

One of the victims is in good condition at Nanaimo Hospital today and the other is reported in poor condition at Vancouver General Hospital.

The Rescue Co-odination Centre said the first call came through by citizen band relay shortly before 6 a.m.

Pierre Roberge, 35, of Nanaimo, one of the two-man crew on a fishboat 23 miles south of Uclulet, caught his arm in the anchor winch. Before it was freed it was badly lacerated and broken in several places.

The Labrador helicopter dispatched to the scene from 424 Rescue Squadron at Comox was unable to lift the pain-wracked man up at sea because of heavy swells, high winds, low cloud and fog.

So a paramedic, Master Cpl. R. J. "Soup" Campbell, dropped into the water and swam to the boat to administer drugs to Roberge. When the boat reached calmer waters close to shore, the Labrador, piloted by Capt. Stu Smith and with co-pilot Cpt. John Randle, airlifted Roberge to hospital at Nanaimo.

Later in the day the same helicopter was called to Tahsis where a man whose chest had been crushed by a rolling log was in deteriorating condition.

It was reported the injured man, Dick Van Eyk, 42, of Tahsis, had suffered several broken ribs and collapsed lung. The only way he could be transported because of the nature of his injury was strapped in a chair.

And because doctors felt the altitude would aggravate the lung injury, the helicopter could not climb high enough for a direct run to Vancouver General across Vancouver Island. The pilot circled the island coast past Victoria in the darkness.

Between the two missions, the Labrador crew had been called out to successfully locate missing boaters near Port Renfrew.

When the Labrador returned to the Comox airbase from Vancouver about 11:30 Friday night, its crew had been on the job close to 18 hours.
